Gay nightclub targeted in worst mass shooting in U.S. history

By Mike Schneider
Associated Press

ORLANDO, Fla. — A gunman wielding an assault-type rifle and a handgun opened fire inside a crowded gay nightclub early Sunday, killing at least 50 people before dying in a gunfight with SWAT officers, police said. It was the deadliest mass shooting in modern U.S. history.

Authorities were investigating the attack on the Florida dance club as an act of terrorism. The gunman's father recalled that his son recently got angry when he saw two men kissing in Miami and said that might be related to the assault.

The shooter called 911 shortly before the attack and referenced ISIS, FBI agent Ronald Hopper said.

At least 53 people were hospitalized, most in critical condition, officials said. A surgeon at Orlando Regional Medical Center said the death toll was likely to climb. "There's blood everywhere," Orlando Mayor Buddy Dyer said.

All of the dead were killed with the assault rifle, according to Rep. Alan Grayson, a Florida Democrat.

Witnesses described a chaotic scene when the gunfire began shortly before the club known as Pulse was to close.

"Some guy walked in and started shooting everybody. He had an automatic rifle, so nobody stood a chance," said Jackie Smith, who had two friends next to her get shot. "I just tried to get out of there."

The suspect was identified as Omar Mateen, a 29-year-old American citizen from Port St. Lucie, Florida, who had worked as a security guard. Mateen's ex-wife said his family was from Afghanistan but that her ex-husband was born in New York. His family later moved to Florida.

The shooter in 2013 made inflammatory comments to co-workers, and Mateen was interviewed twice, Hopper said. He called those interviews inconclusive.

In 2014, Hopper said, officials found that Mateen had ties to an American suicide bomber. He described the contact as minimal, saying it did not constitute a threat at the time.

Mateen purchased at least two firearms legally within the last week or so, according to Trevor Velinor of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms.

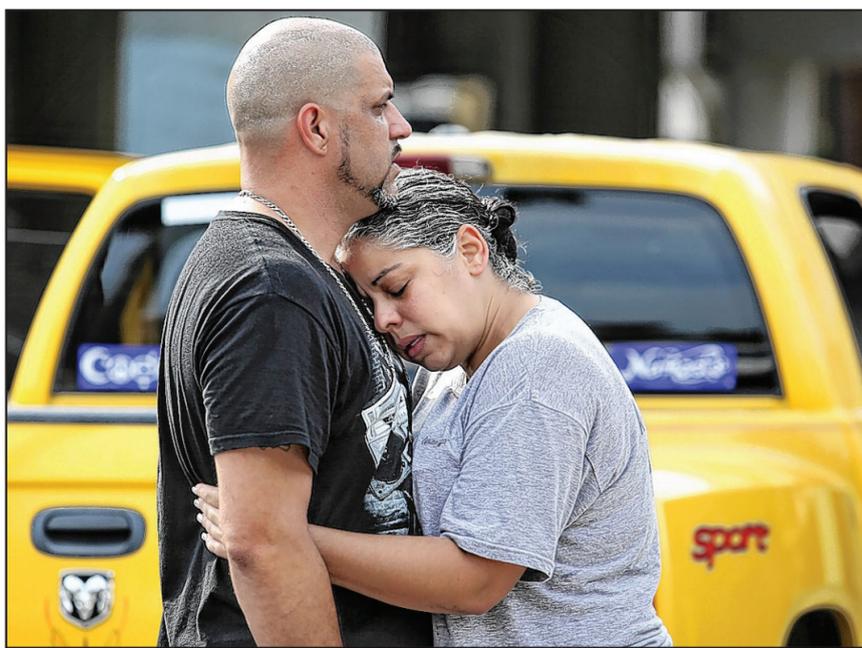

The suspect exchanged gunfire with 14 police officers at the club, which had more than 300 people inside.

At one point, he took hostages, Police Chief John Mina said. Around 5 a.m., authorities sent in a SWAT team to rescue the hostages.

Pulse posted on its own Facebook page around 2 a.m.: "Everyone get out of Pulse and keep running." Just before 6 a.m., the club posted an update: "As soon as we have any information, we will update everyone. Please keep everyone in your prayers as we work through this tragic event. Thank you for your thoughts and love."

In addition to the assault rifle, the shooter also had some sort of "suspicious device," the police chief said.

Massacre increases fears among LGBT community

NEW YORK — The gay, lesbian and transgender community has seen violence before, from Harvey Milk to Matthew Shepard, and an ever-lengthening list of transgender women. But never anything like this.

Sunday's massacre at a gay nightclub in Orlando, Florida, grimly changed the equation, stirring communal fears and swiftly prompting tighter security at gay pride events. The gunman, identified as Omar Mateen of Port St. Lucie, Florida, told his father he had been disturbed by seeing two men kissing in Miami.

The attack on the Pulse nightclub, which killed at least 50 people and was the deadliest U.S. mass shooting to date, occurred amid numerous events nationwide celebrating LGBT Pride Month. In several other cities hosting events Sunday — including block parties in Boston and a festival in Washington — authorities beefed up the police presence.

This "is a tragic illustration of the legitimate safety fears that those in our LGBT community live with every day," said Mike Rawling, the mayor of Dallas, where extra police were assigned to a neighborhood that is a hub of the local gay community.

Before Sunday, the most prominent incidents of violence against gays claimed one life at a time. The highest profile of these included the murder of Milk, a pioneering gay politician in San Francisco in 1978, and the 1998 murder of Shepard, a gay college student in Wyoming at the hands of two men who beat him into a coma while he was tied to a fence. A federal hate crimes law bears Shepard's name.

Investigators were still trying to determine Mateen's motives. He pledged alle-

In the wake of the nation's deadliest mass shooting in history, the Johnson City community is invited to take a moment of silence and prayer during a community gathering tonight at 8 at Founders Park.

A circulating Facebook event had garnered more than 100 confirmed attendees as of Sunday evening, with the number still climbing. John Baker, a leader of the Pride Community Center of the Tri-Cities, said the event will include singing, candles and a moment of silence in addition to an atmosphere of peace and love for the community.

"We must come together and stop the hate," he said. "It is time for Americans to stand up and say 'enough.'"

Reports have identified the shooter as Omar Mateen of Port St. Lucie, Florida, who died in a gunfight with SWAT officers and left at least 50 victims dead and 53 people hospitalized. The Associated Press reported that Mateen called 911 before the attack and pledged allegiance to the Islamic State.

Authorities are investigating the attack as an act of terrorism.

The Muslim Community of Northeast Tennessee sent a news release Sunday afternoon condemning the actions of the gunman. The release stated this is the month of Ramadan, a month of fasting for the Islamic faith, which the center also said is a month of mercy and forgiveness.

"Some have connected the perpetrator to the Islamic faith, but Islam, the faith, is not connected to this

In the course of its history, Milligan College has witnessed the invention of the lightbulb, the birth of rock 'n' roll and the rise — and fall — of bell-bottom jeans.

And on Dec. 10, 2016, the university will celebrate another historical milestone — its 150th birthday.

Vice President for Institutional Advancement Jack Simpson said the college has been planning the celebration for about two years and has sought suggestions from multiple segments of the campus

President says shooter 'filled with hatred'

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Barack Obama decried the deadliest mass shooting in American history on Sunday as a terrorist act targeting a place of "solidarity and empowerment" for gays and lesbians.

Hours after a gunman killed at least 50 people in Orlando, Obama said the FBI would investigate the nightclub shooting as terrorism, but said the alleged shooter's motivations were unclear.

"What is clear is he was a person filled with hatred," Obama said of the alleged shooter. He added: "We know enough to say that this was an act of terror and an act of hate. And as Americans, we are united in grief, in outrage, and in resolve to defend our people."

Obama had planned to travel to Wisconsin on Wednesday for his first campaign appearance of the 2016 race, a joint rally with Hillary Clinton in Green Bay, Wisconsin. But Clinton's campaign and the White House said that event was being postponed in light of the attack.

The president, who has proclaimed June as Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, and Transgender Pride Month, called the attack "heart-breaking" for the LGBT community. He said the site of the shooting was more than a nightclub because it was a place where people came "to raise awareness, to speak their minds and to advocate for their civil rights."

"The shooter targeted a night club where people came together to be with friends to dance and to sing — to live," Obama said.

For Obama, the hastily arranged remarks were the latest in what's become a tragically familiar routine. Since he took office in 2009, Obama has appeared before cameras more than a dozen times following mass shootings and issued written statements after many others.

community.

One of the celebration's centerpieces will be a new commemorative commons called the Sesquicentennial Plaza, which will be constructed in an open area outside the southeast entrance of the P.H. Welshimer Library.

"It's not everyday that a college is able to turn 150 years old," Simpson said, "and we felt like it was appropriate to have a place that felt like it was specifically (intended) to mark that occasion."

The plaza will feature seating areas for students and a pergola, a shaded archway that has a roof thatched out of entangled plant life.

"It's a very well-located, prominent part of campus but a part that maybe hasn't had some of the attention over the last few years and doesn't get as used as much," Simpson said. "So what we wanted to do was create a place that would be kind of a permanent legacy to the sesquicentennial."

The college will also host a gala the evening of Oct. 21 during Homecoming weekend, a formal event will welcome students, alumni and local community leaders.

"We're still working on the program, but I suspect it'll involve some of our student talent," Simpson said. "It'll be a celebration of the past, present, future of Milligan and God's provision for Milligan over the years."

Several other events have been proposed for the college's celebration, including a storytelling event, an alumni/student pen pal program and a homecoming concert.

To pay for the celebration, Milligan is selling an historical book featuring photos of the college throughout its lifespan. The college is also offering the opportunity for people to purchase bricks that will be incorporated into the Sesquicentennial Plaza.

These bricks can be emblazoned with the purchaser's name or the names of loved ones and can be made available through a $150 gift to the Milligan Sesquicentennial Plaza Commemorative Brick Program. To date, about 400 bricks have been purchased.

Milligan alumni will also be in attendance, including Mignon Sewell, a member of the class of 1962.

Sewell grew up in Italy with missionary parents before hearing about Milligan College from an American she and her father met in Paris.

Having spent a majority of her life in Europe, Sewell was initially concerned she would have trouble adjusting to American culture and slang.

"I didn't know where it was, I vaguely knew where Tennessee was," Sewell said, "and it was a perfect fit for me since the faculty was very involved with the students. ... I felt like I got a lot of attention and help in acclimating to America and being around American teenagers and young people."

Sewell believes this kind of stewardship is an integral part of the school and has encouraged her to provide the same kind of service to students who might be experiencing difficulty acclimating to life in the U.S.

"I have a feeling that a lot of kids that come to Milligan are given the attention, the guidance they need to get on the right path and choose a vocation or profession that they'll like," Sewell said.

Sewell stayed in the area after graduating from Milligan and taught foreign language at local public schools. Today, she's still active in alumni programs on campus.

"I'm very proud of Milligan over the past 50 years that I've known the college," Sewell said. "To watch it grow in the arts and in music and in its outreach to the community. ... Milligan has just brought a lot of culture to the region."

and the love of God. When I was young it was embarrassing ... but she was headstrong about it. And I thank her to this day for that because it gave me a foundation in my life."

Thanks to that foundation, Johnson became one of the first people in his family to get a college degree. He enrolled in Hiwassee Junior College in Madisonville and eventually transferred to the University of Tennessee, Knoxville, where he received a full scholarship.

"If it weren't for basketball, I wouldn't have ever gone to college, probably," Johnson said. "I can say that with a 95 percent confidence."

Near the end of his college career, his coach at the time — Kevin O'Neill — asked him to come into his office for a quick talk. "He said, 'You want to continue to play basketball?' in his own words, and I said, 'Yes sir,'" and he said, 'Well, somebody called me from Iceland and wants you to come over. Do you want to go?'"

Johnson didn't know much about Iceland at the time, but he emphatically agreed. And the day after graduation, he was on a plane.

It was his first time outside the county, and almost immediately, Johnson noticed several striking differences between Iceland and the U.S.

"Their national police, they don't have guns," Johnson said. "There's no violence in the whole country."

Another quirk that confused Johnson was the tendency for parents to swaddle their babies in warm clothes and then leave them outside while they went grocery shopping.

"The first time I saw that, I probably stood outside — it was snowing — for about 15 minutes," Johnson said. "Thinking like, 'Man, somebody just left their baby out here. There's just a couple of babies sitting here.'"

Johnson waited outside for a while to make sure nothing happened to the kids and then walked in the store to tell the people inside that somebody had left their babies out in the cold.

"They started cracking up, laughing," Johnson said. "I said, 'What's so funny? There's kids sitting out here in this snow,' and they were like, 'No, this is what we do over here.'"

Quirks aside, Johnson enjoyed his experience playing for Iceland, and his team eventually won a silver medal in the Games of the Small States of Europe, a competition launched by the European Olympic Committee for European countries with a population of less than one million.

During his seven-year tenure as a member of the country's team, he even earned Icelandic citizenship, which he had to receive before he could play for the national team.

After playing in Iceland's top league for a while, Johnson moved to Spain to seek further opportunities. He started out in the country's second-tier league, but after a few years, he was eventually able to move up to Spain's top league.

Johnson played basketball in Spain for eight years. He retired for a brief period of time, but after getting married, he returned to Iceland for another year.

Now, having retired for a second time, Johnson is one of the founders of Tennessee Chosen Few, a nonprofit organization that gets kids interested in basketball and promotes post-secondary education.

"If we can produce good kids, we can produce good adults," Johnson said, "and good adults produce a good community."

The organization also serves as an outlet for kids who are growing up in a difficult environment.

"I lived it first hand," Johnson said, "and (basketball) helped in so many ways that I have to give back."

math of the attack, police departments across the country stepped up patrols in neighborhoods frequented by the LGBT community.

Authorities were looking into whether the attack was an act of domestic or international terrorism, and if the shooter acted alone, according to Danny Banks, an agent with the Florida Department of Law Enforcement.

"This is an incident, as I see it, that we certainly classify as domestic terror incident," Orange County Sheriff Jerry Demings said. The previous deadliest mass shooting in the U.S. was the 2007 attack at Virginia Tech, where a student killed 32 people before killing himself.

Mateen's father, Mir Seddique, told NBC News about his son seeing the men kissing a couple of months ago.

"We are saying we are apologizing for the whole incident," Seddique said. "We are in shock like the whole country."

A federal law enforcement official with knowledge of the investigation said Mateen was known to the FBI before the nightclub attack and had been looked at by agents within the last few years. The official was not authorized to discuss the investigation publicly and spoke on condition of anonymity.

The matter for which he came under investigation was "open and closed pretty quickly," the official said.

When asked if the gunman had a connection to radical Islamic terrorism, Hopper said authorities had "suggestions that individual has leanings towards that."

Mateen's father said the attack had nothing to do with religion, he said.

The gunman was a security guard with a company called G4S. In a 2012 newsletter, the firm identified him as working in West Palm Beach. In a statement sent Sunday to the Palm Beach Post, the security company confirmed that he had been an employee since 2007.

State records show that Mateen had held a firearms license since at least 2011. It was set to expire in 2017.

Authorities said they had secured a van owned by the suspect outside the club. Meanwhile, a SWAT truck and a bomb-disposal unit were on the scene of an address associated with Mateen in a residential neighborhood of Fort Pierce, Florida, about 118 miles southeast of Orlando.

Relatives and friends, many in tears, gathered outside the hospital to learn the fate of loved ones. Smith did not know the conditions of her wounded friends. She came out of the hospital and burst into tears.

Christine Leinonen drove to Orlando at 4 a.m. after learning of the shooting from a friend of her 32-year-old son, Christopher Leinonen, who was at Pulse and is missing.

She had not heard from her son and feared the worst.

A woman who was outside the club early Sunday was trying to contact her 30-year-old son, Eddie, who texted her when the shooting happened and asked her to call police. He told her he ran into a bathroom with other club patrons to hide. He then texted her: "He's coming."

"The next text said: 'He has us, and he's in here with us,'" Mina Justice said. "That was the last conversation."

giance to the Islamic State in a 911 call before the shooting, according to a law enforcement official familiar with the investigation who was not authorized to discuss the matter publicly and spoke on condition of anonymity.

But LGBT activists had no doubt that their community was the intended target. "Our practices and institutions may change in light of this tragedy — LGBT gathering places may have more security now," said the Rev. Ailsan Rowland, pastor of the LGBT-welcoming Metropolitan Community Church of New Orleans. "But we will never, ever go away. We will never be cowed."

Sunday's attack struck a place that has long been thought of as a safe haven for the community — the gay nightclub. "Nightclubs have always been sacred spaces for queer people, places to gather and glitter away from the judging glares of society, where we could love and be loved for who we are and how we want to be," wrote Paul Raushenbush, a clergyman and popular gay writer, expressing his heartbreak in a lengthy, emotional post on Facebook in which he recalled going out dancing while at seminary in New York.

In many cities, vigils were planned at LGBT community centers and other gathering spots to commemorate the victims in Orlando.

Former Ohio senator Voinovich dies at 79

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Former Republican U.S. Sen. George Voinovich, a two-term Ohio governor who preached frugality in his personal and public life and occasionally bucked the GOP establishment, died Sunday. He was 79.

Voinovich, considered a moderate who opposed the size of former President George W. Bush's tax cuts and later questioned Bush's war strategy in Iraq, died peacefully in his sleep, his wife Janet confirmed. His death came as a surprise to friends, who said he seemed strong despite some recent health struggles.

He had delivered public remarks Friday at a 25th Slovenian Independence Day event at Cleveland City Hall. He was a delegate to the Republican National Convention coming to Cleveland next month.

Bush's father, former President George H.W. Bush, said Sunday that Voinovich was one of his closest political allies and a "quintessential public servant," who "brought people together, focused on results, and left his state and our country a better place."

During his 12 years in the Senate, Voinovich occasionally found himself at odds with Republican conservatives. He was an early supporter of a proposed federal bailout for the auto industry, which employs thousands of people in Ohio, and he was the rare Republican during the Bush administration to suggest raising taxes to pay for the war in Iraq and hurricane relief.

Voinovich announced in early 2009 that he would not run for a third Senate term. He said he wanted to retire to spend more time with his family.

Cuyahoga County Executive Armond Budish said Voinovich had continued in recent years to advocate projects that made life better for people in northeast Ohio.

His integrity and toughness were common themes in condolences that poured in from Republicans and Democrats at the local, state and federal levels. Cincinnati Republican Rob Portman, who succeeded Voinovich in the Senate, said he "exemplified everything good about public service." Sen. Sherrod Brown, a Democrat, praised him for being "willing to listen to the other side of an argument."

Republican Gov. John Kasich called Voinovich "a unifier who thought outside the box, never gave up and worked hard for the ideas he believed in up until the very end of his life."

As he left the Senate, Voinovich counted among his accomplishments the passage of a global anti-Semitism bill, an effort to expand NATO and a bill to protect intellectual property. He also touted what he called a "nuclear renaissance," pushing to make it easier for nuclear power plants to get new licenses and financing, and to improve the oversight of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

Voinovich cultivated an image as a debt hawk and opposed President Barack Obama's $787 billion economic stimulus package, saying too much of the spending wasn't stimulative.

He prided himself on personal frugality. He shined his own shoes, bought his clothes on sale and as governor banned peanuts and other snacks on state airplanes to save public money.

Billy O. Proffitt

The spirit of Billy O. Proffitt, age 77, left this world on Thursday, June 9th, 2016. Due to complications from Alzheimer's he slipped away peacefully at home, surrounded by his loving family.

He is a native of Watauga County, NC. As a youth he worked alongside his father in the timber business acquiring his life-long work ethic. After graduating high school from Beaver Creek High School he completed a Bachelor's Degree at Appalachian State Teacher's College in Boone, NC. He then moved to Southern Maryland where he taught high school in Prince George and Calvert Counties in Maryland. He also worked for the Calvert County ASCS office for several years.

In 1970 he moved to Johnson City, TN, where he began a career in Real Estate and Development. He served as chairman of the Washington County Zoning Appeals Board for many years. He received much pleasure from farming, ETSU basketball, and traveling "out west". He was a long time member of Marvin's Chapel United Methodist Church.

He was preceded in death by his parents Arlie and Gertrude Proffitt.

Survivors include his wife of 50 years, Rosalea Farley Proffitt; sons, Patrick and Billy and grandson Josh of Jonesborough; sister, Dian Ray and husband, Jerry of Winston Salem, NC; niece, Candace Ray and nephew, John Ray also of Winston Salem, NC. He was very special to his wife's family in the Maryland area.

Receiving of friends and family will be on Monday, June 13, 2016 from 2-4 pm and 6-8 pm at Marvin's Chapel United Methodist Church. The Celebration of Life Ceremony, officiated by Pastor Ricky Clowers, will begin at 8 pm. The church is located on 1882 Old Boones Creek Road, Johnson City, TN.

The family would like to express a special thank you to the Avalon Hospice team for touching their lives in a special way.

Memorial contributions may be made in Bill's name to Marvin's Chapel United Methodist Church Building Fund or the National Alzheimer's Association. Tetrick Funeral and Cremation Services, 3001 Peoples Street, Johnson City, TN 37604 (423) 610-7171 is serving the family.

Tonys dedicated to Florida victims

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The shooting at a gay Florida nightclub cast a shadow on the 2016 Tony Awards, with organizers dedicating Sunday's ceremony to the victims and Broadway performers rushing to embrace the LGBT community.

"Our hearts are heavy for the unimaginable tragedy that happened last night in Orlando. Our thoughts are with the families and friends of those affected," the Tony Awards said in a statement Sunday. "The Tony Awards dedicate tonight's ceremony to them."

At least 50 people died early Sunday when a gunman opened fire inside a crowded nightclub in Orlando, Florida. It was the deadliest mass shooting in American history.

Organizers didn't say how the evening's Tony broadcast would be affected, but "Hamilton" — the musical about Founding Father Alexander Hamilton that is expected to win big — will drop its use of muskets in its performance, according to a spokesman for the musical. The Tony show also created a clear ribbon for stars to wear in solidarity.

Performers who have strong ties to the gay community like Donna Murphy and Audra McDonald took to Twitter to express their outrage over the attack. Lin-Manuel Miranda, the star and creator of "Hamilton," tweeted a rainbow-hued heart with "Orlando" written beneath it.

Josh Groban, who plans to star on Broadway this fall, tweeted: "We mourn but stand tall." Tony nominee Cynthia Erivo simply wrote: "Sending thoughts to Orlando." Neil Patrick Harris called the tragedy "beyond sad," adding "my deepest regrets to all those suffering."

The performance from the revival of "Spring Awakening," featuring a mix of hearing and deaf performers, was dedicated to the victims. The show's director, Michael Arden, called the attack "senseless." Jesse Tyler Ferguson tweeted: "Heartbroken for my LGBTQ brothers & sisters."

The shooting threatened to put a damper on the expected victory lap for "Hamilton," Miranda's hip-hop-flavored biography about the first U.S. treasury secretary. With its diverse cast, the show has become a cultural phenomenon, bringing attention to Broadway like no other.

At rehearsal, new host James Corden led a show that was endearing, respectful and not at all edgy. The "The Late Late Show" host sang and danced and encouraged others in the audience to pick songs and join him in a bit of karaoke during breaks. No official mention was made of the Orlando attack.

The show itself seemed to burst out of the smallish Beacon Theatre on the Upper West Side, taking a page from the weekly free public concerts outside "Hamilton" to put performers from the nominated shows on tiny stages outside the venue serenading the crowd before and after commercial breaks.

"Hamilton" and the 38 new productions this season helped Broadway's attendance figures hit a record high, up 1.6 percent to 13.3 million ticket buyers. The box offices reported a record total gross of $1.37 billion — up 0.6 percent from the previous season.

Several churches in city in 1908

Recently came across a listing of nine churches in Johnson City in 1908, which was three years after the devastating downtown fire. The find reveals a lot of key information about these places of worship:

1. First Baptist Church: the "Little White Church": East Main Street; Rev. Clarence Hodge, Pastor; Pastorium, 111 Harris Avenue; Sunday School, 9:15 a.m.; Preaching, 10:30 a.m. and 7:30 p.m.; BYPU (Baptist Young Peoples Union), 6:30 p.m.; Prayer Meeting, Wednesday, 7:30 p.m. The church relocated after the fire to Watauga Avenue and eventually to Roan Street, where it acquired a new name: Central Baptist Church.

2. Christian Church: East Main Street; Rev. J. Lem Keevil, Pastor; residence, 209 Buffalo St.; Bible School, Communion and Sermon at 10:30 a.m.; YPSCE (Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor) at 6:30 p.m.;

The unbreakable Barbara Schmidt

Kingsport woman reflects on building, flying planes

By HOLLY NELMS
NET News Service

KINGSPORT — Barbara Schmidt has spent her life going above and beyond, both literally and figuratively.

From working full time to impersonating Amelia Earhart to building and flying airplanes, Schmidt has lived life to the fullest, while never neglecting her duties as a mother.

"She's really done so many things that I just think are amazing," said Debbie Bell, Schmidt's daughter. "I told her to be proud of all the things she's accomplished."

Schmidt was born in Macedon Center, New York, in 1932. She grew up on a farm with her parents, five brothers and two sisters, where they didn't have the luxuries of central heat or electricity.

"Everybody back then was in the same boat; nobody had much," Schmidt said. "We didn't have anything, but we didn't miss it, because we didn't know that somebody else might have it a lot better than we did."

As a child, she attended school in a one-room schoolhouse with no bathrooms or drinking fountains. Because her family didn't have a car in those days, Schmidt and her siblings found other, more exciting ways to travel.

"Sometimes in the winter, my brothers would put me on the sleigh and take me down the hill to the school," she said. "We didn't have any mittens, so we put socks on our hands."

Schmidt went on to attend Monroe High School in Rochester, New York, becoming the first member of her family to graduate high school. Her first job was sweeping up a barber shop every night, earning $2 a week, which she spent on baton lessons for herself. She then moved on to work for several other businesses in New York, including a dry cleaner, a printing company, a potato chip factory and a construction company. Then, after moving to Florida, she worked for an accounting company, her local chamber of commerce and the Ocala Star-Banner, an affiliate of The New York Times.

"My job was to interview someone and do a feature — photos and everything — and the next week, I would do a column," she said. "I think that's the last I worked, but that was plenty. It saved some time for building an airplane."

Schmidt and her husband first became interested in building airplanes after they attended a flying exhibition in Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

"It was pretty interesting to see all the planes that people have built," she said. "Coming home from that, we stopped in Michigan because this person had a frame for an airplane. We ended up buying it and carried it home on the top of our car and started building from there."

It took Schmidt and her husband about two years to build their first plane, a single-seat, open-cockpit Baby Ace. Her husband flew the plane first, though Schmidt wasn't far behind.

"One day I decided, 'I'm going to (fly) it today,'" she said. "When we got to the airport, I just got the airplane started, and I went down to the end of the runway and I took off. My husband tried to take a picture, but he was so excited he twisted the lens right off the camera."

Schmidt and her husband then built a second plane, a single-seat, open-cockpit biplane with a radial engine. After one of her husband's friends took care of the welding, Schmidt and her husband covered the plane in fabric in their garage.

"I was the only kid in the neighborhood with the tail of a plane sticking out of her garage," Bell said.

THE MORE THINGS CHANGE ...

Present-day college football mirrors 1969 TSSAA path

By DOUGLAS FRITZ
Press Staff Writer
dfritz@johnsoncitypress.com

Looking at the present provides a glimpse of the past when it comes to football playoffs.

Former TSSAA executive director Ronnie Carter said college football is experiencing the same growing pains high schools went through in Tennessee in the late 1960s.

During those days, Tennessee didn't have a playoff to determine a state champion. Polls decided the title, and it wasn't just one poll. In fact it wasn't even two, like college football's AP and UPI polls — which ruled from 1950 until the adoption of a national championship game in 1998. In Tennessee, there were three different polls crowning champions from 1960 to 1968.

And in only two of those nine seasons there was a unanimous champion (Battle Ground Academy in 1966 and Montgomery Bell Academy in 1967). In 1964, there were three different champs (Jackson — Litkenhouse; Maryville — AP; and Dobyns-Bennett — UPI).

Folks were clamoring for a way to settle the issue on the field. But something was standing in the way: Bowl games. Sound familiar, college football?

"I've told people this over the years, but when you watch the college football conversation today it mirrors exactly what happened in the late 1960s," said Carter.

High school football teams in the 1960s were playing 10 regular season games, and then the best teams were invited to bowl games. Carter said there were maybe 20-25 bowl games across the state, and those games were making pretty good money.

"It was the Lions Bowl, or the Rotary Bowl, or whatever," said Carter. "And it was a major money-maker for organizations like that."

So while a statewide high school football playoff seemed like an idea whose time had come — and even though such a change was sweeping across the nation in the high school ranks — people operating the bowl games weren't going to rush in and support a playoff at the expense of their cash cows.

Popular opinion won out, however, as schools voted 188 to 20 to adopt a playoff system. The TSSAA Board of Control then approved a plan that would divide Tennessee into four geographical regions. And there were three classifications based on enrollment:

- Class A — 0 to 499 students.
- Class AA — 500 to 999.
- Class AAA — 1,000 and over. Still, there was a bit of a compromise. The TSSAA decided to only have four teams in the playoffs, and the bowl games were still part of the postseason landscape. Sound familiar, college football?

"I remember being on the road with (former TSSAA executive director) Gill Gideon, and him giving me the history," said Carter. "They decided to have two rounds, semifinals and finals. No one would have comprehended eight teams at that time. Doesn't that sound like college stuff?"

"Now people in college area talking about eight, and that's exactly what happened in high school. It went eight, then 16, then 32. If someone had told people in 1967 or 1968 that one day you would have six classes and 32 teams in each of them, no one would have comprehended it. Each of those little movements were major."

Of course the big question was deciding which four teams would make the playoffs in each classification. A points system was developed where teams got 10 points for every win over a team in its own class, and five points for a tie. For beating a team in the next lower class it was four points, and ties were worth two points. Playing a team in a higher classification did not earn extra points.

Of course ties were an issue. In the case of a tie for a region title, the first tiebreaker was head to head. The second tiebreaker was which team's opponents had earned the highest number of points.

Still if there were undefeated teams, somebody wasn't going to be happy about not having a chance to play for a state title.

"You've got three teams, all 10-0," said Carter. "My team sits home while your team goes to the playoffs. You can imagine what was in the newspapers."

"I remember the controversy, but it wasn't controversy like it is today. You've got to remember the playoffs were new, and the bowl games were still going on. If my team was good and didn't make the playoffs, I was still in the bowl games. And in many cases, they were bigger than the playoffs were."

Another area of controversy was the TSSAA setting the sites for the semifinals and finals. Carter experienced it first hand when he was an assistant coach at Nashville Overton, and his team had to travel to Bristol to take on defending state champion Tennessee High in the 1972 state semifinals.

"It was a big deal where we were going to play the game," said Carter. "I was thinking it would be in Nashville, but it ended up being in Bristol. It was a major controversy."

The Vikings beat Overton 26-0 en route to their second state championship and a mythical national title.

"Everything evolved, and we had to figure a better way," said Carter. "We traveled the state, and put everybody in eight districts. Now we're playing everybody. "And now you come up to today, and there's not a bowl game left. People say that won't happen in college football because money drives it. But it's the same story high school went through — just with less zeroes."

The first championships went to South Pittsburg, Loudon and Morristown. South Pittsburg defeated Tennessee Prep School 26-6 for the Class A title, Loudon topped Humboldt 30-0 in Class AA, and Morristown East defeated Memphis Southside 15-12 in the Class AAA championship.

In an interesting side note, East's lone loss during the 1969 season came against Dobyns-Bennett. The Indians won the second game of the season, 14-13. D-B scored on a four-yard pass on the final play of the game, and George Carty kicked the extra point for the win. Morristown East would go on to outscore its remaining eight regular season opponents by a combined margin of 327-18.

Another key game was Elizabethton (8-0) against East (6-1). Former Morristown Citizen Tribune Sports Editor Fred Williams said it was "the most covered high school game in the state ever."

"Morristown had two newspapers at the time and the game was covered by two radio stations," said Williams. "Elizabethton had a newspaper and radio station there. Johnson City had a newspaper and radio station, Kingsport both, Bristol both, and Knoxville had two newspapers and a radio station."

East won 31-8 behind Ken Rucker's five touchdowns, and the Hurricanes held Cyclones' All-State back John Pansock to eight yards rushing while limiting the Cyclones to 67 yards of total offense.

East earned its spot in the title game with a 27-26 semifinal win over Franklin County. Former East offensive and defensive tackle Walt Bragg said the championship game was something special.

"It was new, and anytime you do something new — kind of like the college playoff system — there can be controversy or hesitation," said Bragg, who would later go on to be an assistant coach at East Tennessee State University and a head coach at Morristown East. "But it was a real big thing for us at Morristown East, and it was a real big thing for Southside. And we had a very big turnout for the game."

"It still means a lot. It's a historical account of something: the very first playoffs. To play in something like that was very special to all of us." Bragg said the title game was originally scheduled to be played at Morristown East, but was moved to Knoxville's Evans-Collins Field because the Hurricanes' field was torn up from the semifinal contest played in the rain.

Morristown East trailed Southside by a score of 12-7 midway through the fourth quarter. A low snap on a punt attempt allowed Morristown to take possession at Southside's 24-yard line. Still at the 24 on fourth and 10, Carter Davis his Marshall Mills with a 14-yard pass. Ken Rucker took over from there, running for the winning score and adding the 2-point conversion run.

"Togetherness won the state championship for us," Hurricanes' head coach Rex Dockery said to the Nashville Tennessean after the game. "These boys played as a unit in practice and throughout the season. It's hard to beat something like that."

Dockery would later become an assistant coach under Bill Battle at Tennessee, where he coached Phil Fulmer. Dockery also coached at Georgia Tech, Vanderbilt, and then became head coach at Texas Tech in 1978. He moved on to Memphis State in 1981, spending three years as head coach of the Tigers before tragically dying at the age of 41 in a plane crash in Lawrenceburg.

Although the bowl games lessened the overall impact of those first title games, it's a much bigger deal these days. The games are popular enough to be played in one centrally located site, and the fans come to Cookeville to watch eight games of championship football over the course of three days.

Also, teams have built giant histories upon the foundation of that first title game — most notably Maryville (15 titles) and Alcoa (14).

"I think Maryville is most unbelievable story I've observed," said Carter. "How many years in a row have they been in the title game in the largest classification? I can't even comprehend it."

Maryville has played in seven straight championship games, winning four. But for everything Maryville has accomplished, it wouldn't have been possible without the foresight of the TSSAA to begin a playoff system in 1969.

Maybe one day college football will have the same picture in its rear-view mirror.

Teen picks up drug charges

Police who pulled over a Bluff City teen Saturday night for reportedly driving aggressively found marijuana in his car, a news release from the department said.

Effoe

Cameron Effoe, 18, 480 Shawnee Drive, Apt. B, was arrested after a traffic stop revealed a Mason jar containing 25 grams of marijuana in his car and a set of digital scales under his clothes, the release said.

According to the release, police were prompted to pull Effoe's vehicle over after they witnessed him driving aggressively and following other vehicles too closely. Police said they noticed the smell of marijuana coming from the car, and Effoe admitted to having the drug in his car after officers confronted him.

He was charged with felony schedule VI drug violations, unlawful drug paraphernalia and following too close.

Effoe was taken to the Washington County Detention Center on $11,000 bond, and he will be arraigned this afternoon in Sessions Court.

Authorities investigating shooting

The Sullivan County Sheriff's Office is seeking information on a person of interest in connection with a shooting incident that occurred Sunday morning in Blountville.

Moore

Officers determined that the shooting occurred at a garage located at 297 Tri State Lime Road in Blountville.

According to the release, Michael S. Moore, 34, has been identified as a person of interest in this case. Additionally, Moore has an outstanding arrest warrant for violation of probation.

Moore is considered armed and dangerous and has made numerous threats toward law enforcement officers, according to the release.

Anyone with information concerning Moore's whereabouts is asked to contact the sheriff's office immediately at 423-279-7500, ext. 222. Tips can also be submitted at www.scsotn.com.

The shooting victim, identified as Robert Richmond, 52, was airlifted from Indian Path Medical Center to Johnson City Medical Center with serious injuries.

Identity released in tractor accident

BLOUNTVILLE — The Sullivan County Sheriff's Offices on Sunday made public the name of a man killed in a tractor accident Friday.

William McClure, 61, Old Blairs Gap Road, was pronounced dead at the scene on property along that road, according to SCSO Public Information Officer Leslie Earhart.

Sheriff's personnel responded to that location, near Kingsport, just before 10 a.m. Friday to a reported accident involving a tractor.

Upon arrival officers observed a tractor with a hay baler attached. McClure was found trapped underneath the baler. He was pronounced dead at the scene.

It appears McClure had gotten off the tractor when it began rolling forward, knocking him to the ground and causing the hay baler to roll over him.

Police: Man assaulted ex-girlfriend

A woman's ex-boyfriend left her at the door of an EMS station after assaulting her, Johnson City police said in a news release.

Officers were called to help EMS workers Friday night with an unnamed woman who was left at the EMS station with minor injuries. According to the release, officers found that she had been assaulted later in the evening by her ex-boyfriend, John Tucker, 36, 500 Lamont St.

The release said the assault happened earlier in the evening at T's Market, 607 N. Roan St., when Tucker grabbed the woman, pulled a knife on her and forced her to drive him to his apartment.

The woman began to have a medical episode after arriving there, and Tucker dropped her off at the EMS station, police said.

Tucker left the scene, but police found him nearby with a black knife in his possession, the release said.

Tucker was charged with aggravated assault and is being held at the Washington County Detention Center on $10,000 bond. His arraignment is scheduled for Monday afternoon in Sessions Court.

From staff reports

You put on that life preserver now!

CLOSE TO HOME

During this time for honoring fathers, I find myself appreciating, more than ever, the terrible worry I put mine through as a teenager. Now I have my own teenagers and my own worry.

As if it's not enough that my oldest daughter, Carly, is motoring about in a car, she now insists on driving to the lake to swim with friends.

Worry. After securing the paddleboard to her car one recent evening, Carly announced she would be leaving before dawn. It was a friend's idea, allegedly, to arrive at Boone Lake in time to watch the sunrise.

"Like that's going to happen," I said dismissively at about 11 p.m. It happened. After awakening to the sound of the automatic garage door closing in the predawn darkness, I stumbled out the front door to make sure she had plenty of sunscreen. The tail lights were barely visible.

My father never worried about me getting sunburned. He made up for that by stressing over just about every other bad thing that could possibly happen, and it started long before any of his children were teenagers. "Never hang your arm out the window of a car," he often warned. "I know a man who only has one arm because he did that."

Dad had an unfortunate friend for every risky behavior. I used to doubt that one man could possibly know so many people who'd been horribly disfigured, blinded or otherwise permanently disabled by their own thoughtlessness?

I now realize they really existed. Live long enough and you will compile a lengthy list of people who either did not survive some terrible mishap or made only a partial recovery.

my face and arms were exposed to the sun. The rest of my body was either in the water or covered.

Neglect to wear a T-shirt under those ugly orange lifejackets and they would rub your nipples raw. I'd rather have the sunburn.

The worst thing that ever happened to me at the lake was when I caught my neck with a fishhook. The car crashes were what kept my dad awake at night until he heard me come home.

I had a little taste of that after Carly left so early for the lake and I couldn't go back to sleep. When I texted at 6:30 to remind her about sunscreen, she had already been in the lake.

"The water is FREEZING!" she texted back.

"Brrrrr!" I texted. "Have I told you about my friend who got hypothermia swimming in a cold lake?"

I went on to list every person I have known or heard about who dived into unfamiliar waters and suffered tragic consequences.

"And wear a life vest at all times."

That was a big one with my dad. I started riding bicycles to the lake with my friend Paul Lockhart when we were 14, long before the days of fashionable floatation wear. Dad provided us with ugly orange life jackets to strap to our bicycles.

They were from the same stock my siblings and I had worn in public pools as young children, when only my face and arms were exposed to the sun. The rest of my body was either in the water or covered.

Neglect to wear a T-shirt under those ugly orange lifejackets and they would rub your nipples raw. I'd rather have the sunburn.

University of Virginia at Wise Associate Professor of History Brian McKnight will be the speaker at the Tri-Cities Civil War Roundtable set for Monday, June 13, at 7 p.m., at the Eastman Employee Center, Room 219, in Kingsport.

McKnight will speak on "The Two Battles of Saltville." The first battle went from Oct. 1-3, 1864, and the second was from Dec. 20-21, 1864. The first was won by the Confederates.

The second battle was won by the Federals, which was a plan by Gen George Thomas of attacking from Knoxville up through Bean Station; Rogersville; Kingsport; Bristol; Abingdon, Va.; Marion, Va.; Wytheville, Va.; and Saltville, Va. The Confederates could just fight a "defense and retreat" strategy.

In the first battle, Union cavalry and infantry raiders led by Brig. Gen. Stephen Burbridge attempted to destroy the saltworks near Saltville. He was delayed at Clinch Mountain and Laurel Gap by a makeshift Confederate force, enabling Brig. Gen. Alfred E. Jackson to concentrate troops near Saltville to meet him.

The program is free and open to the public. The group will have copies of their latest newsletter available, and will be handing out membership forms.

Mr. Perfect

D-B's Corker aces ACT as a sophomore

By Rick Wagner
NET News Service

KINGSPORT — When John Lewis Corker started his freshman year at Dobyne-Bennett High School, his goal was to score a perfect ACT score his sophomore year.

This spring, he got word that he had met his goal of a 36 a year before many students normally take the ACT.

"I really hadn't set a lot of goals for myself," John said Monday. So he decided a perfect ACT his sophomore year would be a good one. Halfway through his just completed sophomore year, he was ranked about 10th in his class of about 554.

The oldest son of two attorneys, one a federal judge, credited his success to attending ACT tutoring from Cheryl Lawson in Gray starting his freshman year, a process that used old ACT exams.

In seventh grade, he took the ACT and scored a 27, which got him into the TIP program at Duke University the following summer. He made a 33 on the test his freshman year, and then a 36 his sophomore year, which he took April 9.

He got word of his score in a May 3 letter from ACT, which points out that less than one-tenth of 1 percent of all test takers earn the top score. Among ACT-tested high school graduates in the class of 2015, 1,598 out of 1.92 million earned a composite score of 36 in four subject areas: English, math, reading and science.

John said he definitely would recommend anybody seeking a high score on the ACT to get tutoring. He said that being a good reader, maybe even a speed-reader, reading 90 lines in three minutes, is important to get through the questions, as is double-checking and a "little bit of good luck."

His stay-at-home mother Alice Corker, said she tried to get him to work harder, but he did fine. His father is Cliff Corker, a federal magistrate judge who hears cases in Greeneville.

"He had a very relaxed feel for the test," she said, adding that he prepared ahead of time, did no cramming and got a good night's sleep before the test.

John said he likes history and social studies along with science, but his mother said she and his dad emphasized a science career for good financial opportunities.

He has had three blocks of Latin, and for 2015-16, was in the unified math track, taking trigonometry and pre-calculus the same school year he took Advanced Placement chemistry and Advanced Placement U.S. history. As for college, he hasn't picked one yet but said he's still researching. He is considering Duke University and the University of Tennessee. He wants to seek a degree in nuclear science.

"UT has a good nuclear program," John said, adding that Duke has good science programs, but that the high tuition and limited scholarships could be an issue.

Although he doesn't plan to take the ACT again, his days of standardized testing are not quite over yet. He took the PSAT his sophomore year and will take it again his junior year to become eligible for the National Merit Scholarship program. He plans to take the SAT after that.

"I enjoy just kind of thinking about things a lot," John said, adding that he reads "when I have the time" and plays video games with his younger brother, Leland Corker.

STANFORD SEXUAL ASSAULT CASE

Students support victim at graduation

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

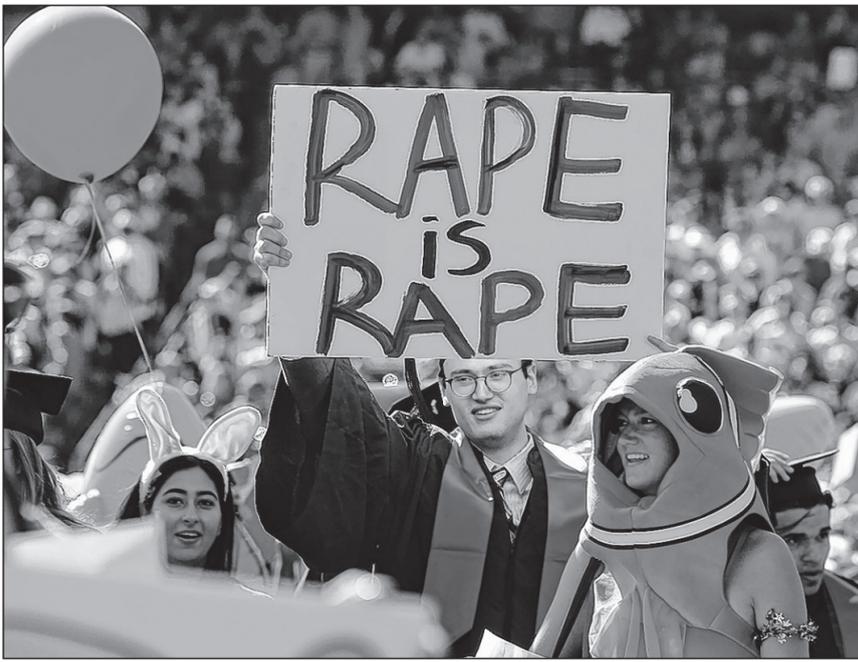

PALO ALTO, Calif. — Stanford University graduating students and women's rights advocates used the school's commencement ceremony to again express their anger over the six-month jail sentence given to a former student for sexually assaulting an unconscious woman.

A handful of students demonstrated Sunday during "Wacky Walk," a rambunctious, slow-moving stroll by graduating students dressed in zany costumes that precedes the official graduation events.

One person held a sign that declared "Stanford protects rapists." Another graduate's sign was a message to the victim: "You are a warrior."

Organizers said they wanted to show solidarity to the woman sexually assaulted on campus last year by former Stanford swimmer Brock Turner.

"It's very important to amplify the voice of survivors," said Brienne Huntsman, a protest organizer.

Paul Harrison, center, carries a sign of protest during Stanford University graduation exercises at Stanford Stadium on Sunday in Stanford, Calif.

The victim's emotional statement to the court about how the assault devastated her life was widely shared online, attracting national attention to the case.

Documentary filmmaker Ken Burns, whose rousing keynote speech called on Republicans to reconsider their endorsement of Donald Trump, closed his address urging sexual assaults be taken seriously.

"If someone tells you they have been sexually assaulted, take it effing seriously and listen to them," said Burns, who is the father of four girls. "Maybe someday we'll make the survivor's eloquent statement as important as Dr. (Martin Luther) King's letter from the Birmingham jail."

Turner's six-months in jail sentence, which also orders him to register as a sex offender for life, touched off an emotional national debate about leniency and campus sexual assault and sparked outrage with critics collecting thousands of signatures to demand trial Judge Aaron Persky be removed from the bench.

Turner, 20, of Oakwood, Ohio, is scheduled to be released from Santa Clara County jail in September, after completing three months of his sentence due to good behavior.

Proposed premium hikes rattle consumers paying own way

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Millions of people who pay the full cost of their health insurance will face the sting of rising premiums next year, with no financial help from government subsidies.

Renewal notices bearing the bad news will go out this fall, just as the presidential election is in the home-stretch.

"I don't know if I could swallow another 30 or 40 percent without severely cutting into other things I'm trying to do, like retirement savings or reducing debt," said Bob Byrnes, of Blaine, Minnesota, a Twin Cities suburb. His monthly premium of $524 is already about 50 percent more than he was paying in 2015, and he has a higher deductible.

President Barack Obama's health law provides income-based subsidies for consumers who buy individual policies on HealthCare.gov and state insurance markets. About 10 million people get assistance, helping reduce the uninsured rate to a historically low 9 percent.

But there's no subsidy for those making more than $47,520 for an individual and $97,200 for a family of four — cutoffs that represent four times the federal poverty level. Also, subsidies are not available for consumers at any income level who purchase outside of HealthCare.gov or a state marketplace. Those who remain uninsured risk fines.

Premiums are expected to climb next year in many areas because major insurers have taken significant financial losses under the health law. Enrollment has been lower than anticipated, new customers were sicker than expected and a government system to stabilize the markets had problems.

"People receiving subsidies can protect themselves from premium increases, but others who buy their own coverage don't have that option," said Larry Smith, who tracks the health law for the nonpartisan Kaiser Family Foundation. He estimated 5 million to 7 million consumers nationally may be paying full freight.

Byrnes, a manager for a medical courier service, says he supports the law's goal of expanded coverage, but he hasn't found his policy particularly affordable.

In the small East Texas city of Lufkin, Kirk Smith buys his policy from the only insurer available, which also happens to be the state's largest.

Blue Cross Blue Shield of Texas is seeking an average premium increase of nearly 60 percent for 2017, and Smith says his monthly bill of about $350 is already about as much as a car payment. Moreover, he's had to drive to a neighboring county for medical care because he couldn't get an appointment close to home.

"I've got a problem when you can't see somebody in the county, and they want an increase?" said Smith, who works for a contractor installing telecommunications equipment. He said the government should subsidize everyone in rural communities with no insurer competition.

Michelle Scarola of Queens, a borough of New York City, said she has received notice that her 2017 premiums will be going up in a range of 8 percent to 25 percent. Scarola, who's in the midst of a career transition from advertising to interior design, isn't happy that her insurer dropped the hospital network she's interested in.

"For people like me who are in the middle, there is very limited choice, and now that limited choice is going to get more expensive," she said.

Insurance broker Liz Gallops in Raleigh, North Carolina, says she tries to let customers vent about large increases. Some see insurance bills that surpass their mortgage payments.

Sources say 'El Chapo' likely to be prosecuted in Brooklyn

NEW YORK — In the nationwide sweepstakes among federal jurisdictions to put Mexican drug kingpin and escape artist Joaquin "El Chapo" Guzman on trial, the place currently leading the pack is far from the border: Brooklyn.

Guzman

Justice Department officials in Washington still aren't commenting on the closely watched decision involving seven prosecutor's offices that have indicted Guzman on drug conspiracy and other charges over the past two decades.

But two law enforcement officials familiar with the process told The Associated Press that it's likely that if transferred from Mexican to U.S. custody in the coming months, Guzman would be sent to the Eastern District of New York in Brooklyn.

The two officials spoke on condition of anonymity because they weren't authorized to publicly discuss the decision.

Brooklyn, an office once run by Attorney General Loretta Lynch, has long been rumored to be the front-runner while Guzman has been vigorously fighting extradition.

Drug trafficking allegations against FedEx head to trial

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN FRANCISCO — Two giants — the U.S. government and FedEx — are set to do battle in a federal court over the explosive claim that the shipping company knowingly delivered illegal prescription drugs such as Ambien from pill mills to dealers and addicts, some of whom died.

Fedex has denied the charges and says it only shipped what it believed were legal drugs from licensed pharmacies. Opening statements are scheduled to start Monday.

The trial — nearly two-years in the making — is unusual both for the government's decision to bring drug charges against a package delivery company and the lack of a settlement. Rival UPS Inc. paid $40 million in 2013 to resolve similar allegations that arose from a yearslong government crackdown on Internet pharmacies that ship drugs to customers without valid prescriptions.

The stakes are high for Memphis, Tennessee-based FedEx. Though no FedEx officials are facing prison time, the charges carry a potential fine of $1.6 billion.

"It's incredibly rare for there to be any trial in the prosecution of a corporation," said Brandon Garrett, a professor at the University of Virginia School of Law who studies corporate crime. "Many large corporations like Fedex have received deferred or non-prosecution deals where they avoid an indictment all together."

Prosecutors say FedEx starting in 2000 conspired with two Internet pharmacy organizations to ship powerful sleep aids, sedatives, painkillers and other drugs to customers who had not been physically examined by a doctor. FedEx continued to ship drugs from the pharmacy groups even as law enforcement officials shut down some of their affiliates, prosecutors allege.

The crux of the government's case is that FedEx knew the drugs were illegal.

When do you raise the American flag?

Tuesday is national Flag Day. In 1949, Congress established June 14 as a day to commemorate the date in 1777 when the Second Constitutional Congress officially adopted a flag for the United States.

It's a day to honor one of this nation's most cherished symbols. Unfortunately, because Flag Day is not a federal holiday, it doesn't always get the respect it deserves.

This may be the reason so many Americans forget to display their flags on this date. You will undoubtedly see more flags unfurled on Independence Day. In fact, the Fourth of July may be the only time of the year when many Americans raise a flag at their homes.

Every American has the right to decide for him or herself when to display the Stars and Stripes, but if you are going to hoist a flag, then you should follow proper etiquette in doing so. Some tips from the U.S. Flag Code include:

- When displayed from a staff projecting horizontally or at an angle from a window sill, balcony, or front of a building, the union of the flag should be seen at the peak of the staff.
- The American flag must be flown above all other flags on the same pole.

AS WE SEE IT

- The flag should only be flown in a respectable condition. Torn or tattered flags should not be displayed.

- Only all-weather flags should be flown during inclement weather.

- A flag may only be displayed for 24 hours if it is properly illuminated at night.

Finally, there are also some very specific rules for disposing of a tattered or torn flag. The U.S. Flag Code instructs, "The flag, when it is in such a condition that it is no longer a fitting emblem for display, should be destroyed in a dignified way, preferably by burning." Afterwards, the ashes should be buried in a ceremony.

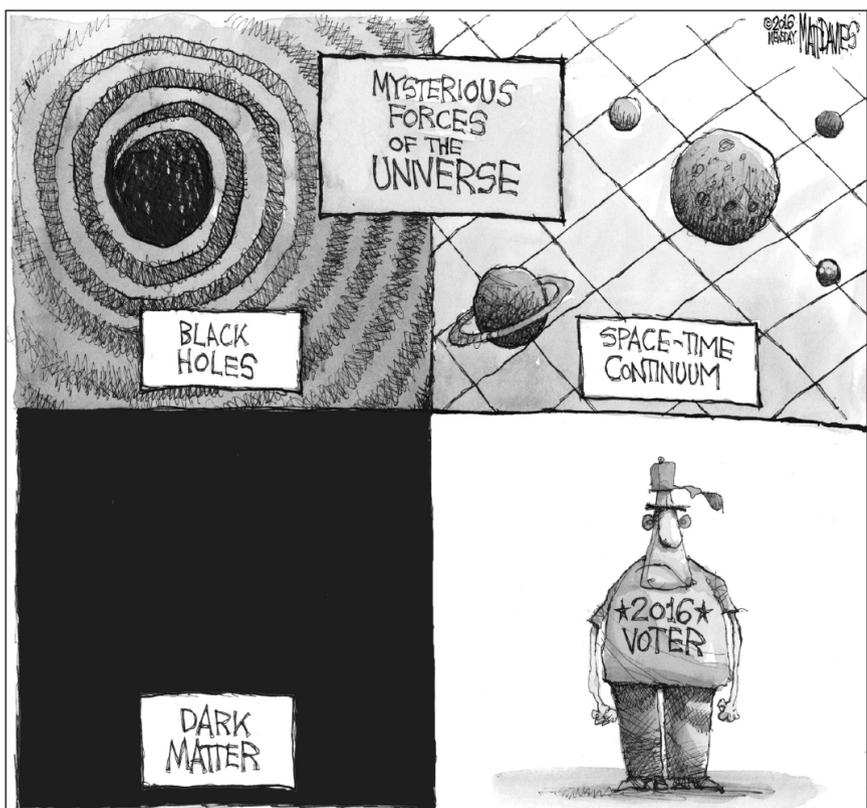

There are several organizations that will help you retire your flag in a correct and respectful manner. They include Veterans of Foreign Wars, the American Legion and the Boy Scouts of America.

We want to hear from you. When do you fly the American flag? Is it something you think is relevant in today's society?

PEN POINTS

Two very important questions for Mr. Trump

Donald Trump attacks journalists who dare to ask him hard questions. Now, according to Bloomberg News, he's urging his supporters to assail reporters who challenge him on a critical issue: his denunciation of a federal judge presiding over a fraud case against one of his business ventures, Trump University.

Trump says the judge, Gonzalo Curiel, cannot rule fairly because "he's a Mexican" and Trump wants to build a wall across the Southern border. "It's an absolute conflict of interest," he says.

Judge Curiel was born in Indiana, and many appalled Republicans agree with Speaker Paul Ryan that Trump's tirade fits the "the textbook definition of a racist comment." Trump now says his remarks were misconstrued, but that's absurd. Everyone knows what he meant. He even doubled down on his position, saying on CBS that a Muslim judge might also be prejudiced against him.

"The people asking the questions — those are the racists," he said on a conference call, reports Bloomberg. "I would go at 'em."

We'll take that risk. We have two questions that bear directly on Trump's qualifications to be president, and voters deserve answers.

1. What don't you understand about the rule of law and the independence of the judiciary in the American system?

It's certainly fair to criticize judicial rulings; President Obama has done it many times. It's very different to question the qualifications of judges based on their ethnicity and race.

Newt Gingrich, who's been auditioning for the job of Trump's running mate, got it right when he told radio host John Gibson: "We don't judge you as part of a group. That would be to suggest that blacks can't get a fair white judge, whites can't get a fair black judge. Once you go down that road, you destroy America."

Cokie & Steve Roberts

There's an even larger point here. Trump profoundly misunderstands the balance of power, and the role of the judiciary as a vital check on executive over-reach. His pugnacious attitude echoes the arrogance of Richard Nixon and the lawlessness that led to Watergate.

"This is how authoritarianism starts, with a president who does not respect the judiciary," writes retired law professor David Post. "The president has to be clear that the law is the law, and that he enforces the law. That is his constitutional obligation."

2. What don't you understand about the history of this country and what it means to be an American?

Judge Curiel is a classic immigrant story. His father worked as a farm laborer in Arizona, became a steelworker in East Chicago, Indiana, sent his son to law school and saw him become a federal judge in California.

The Curiels represent this country's highest ideals. The judge achieved his position based on merit, not birth. He is fully an American, and if Donald Trump doesn't understand that, he doesn't grasp the essence of the nation he seeks to lead.

Even Sen. Mitch McConnell, the Republican leader who has jumped on the Trump train, could not stomach his latest lunacy. McConnell's wife, Elaine Chao, was born in Taiwan and became Secretary of Labor, so he speaks from experience.

"All of us came here from somewhere else," he told NBC's "Meet the Press." "Almost all Americans are either near-term immigrants like my wife, who came here at age 8 not speaking a word of English, or the rest of us whose ancestors were risk-takers who came here and made this country great. That's an important part of what makes America work."

Often during the last year, Trump has made what would seem to be fatal political mistakes: demeaning John McCain's prisoner of war experience, for example, or endorsing punishment for women seeking abortions. He survived them all, but this controversy could be different.

America is changing very rapidly, and the electorate will be only 70 percent white next fall. Trump now has to appeal to all voters, not just older white male Republicans, and he's alienating, yet again, the fastest-growing group in the country.

"It's a big mistake for our party to write off Latino Americans," noted McConnell, adding that "they're an important part of the country."

More seriously, Trump's conduct reveals a streak of intolerance and intemperance that many voters could find deeply disturbing. And it is those voters, not journalists, who will ask the most important question of all: Does this man have the judgment and character to be president? Can we trust him to keep our families and our country safe?

If the Curiel case is any guide, the answer should be "no."

Innocents drown as the wars rage on

The mixed picture that migration from war-torn and economically challenged parts of the Middle East and Africa into Europe presents must be of concern to Americans as well as to Europeans.

There has been a slight shift. It was the case that the flow of migrants from war-ridden countries such as Afghanistan, Iraq, Syria and Yemen through Turkey into Europe through Greece was the primary problem. The Europeans found the magnitude of the flow hard to absorb and beginning to create understandable political resistance to refugees at home, even in prosperous Germany.

Facing that challenge, the Europeans made something of a deal with Turkey. Turkey would absorb them to some extent, prevent them from setting sail across the Aegean Sea, and even take some of them back, in return for concessions on the European Union side, including visa-free travel for Turkish citizens in some of the European countries.

AS THEY SEE IT

But now there is a new assault from the south, into Europe from North Africa. This time Libya, a previous offender, and Egypt, a new origin for migrants, appears to be allowing them to leave their shores in unseaworthy dinghies and other boats to cross the Mediterranean Sea toward Greece and Italy. Boats have capsized and many hundreds have died, their bodies washing up on shores or floating to the surface.

Some of the migrants are from previous common sources, poor Africans seeking work in Europe. Others are from troubled African countries such as Eritrea, Ethiopia, Somalia and South Sudan. More troubling, however, is the fact that more and more of the Mediterranean migrants are from war-torn countries to the east of Europe.

From the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette

The right to conceal and carry in Washington, D.C.

PURCELL'S LOGIC

"Why did we just file for a permit to carry a concealed firearm in Washington, D.C.?" said my friend as I walked with him and his wife to their posh Capitol Hill condo.

"Because we got tired of getting mugged," said his wife.

"We had to develop a protocol on how to act in the event of a mugging," said my friend.

"A protocol on how to act?" I asked.

"Sure," said his wife. "We learned that the victim should never be rude during the mugging transaction."

"How can you be rude to a mugger?" I asked.

"Ignoring the mugger is rude," said my friend. "This will give him license to shoot you or strike you with a blunt object."

"Why not just run?" I suggested. "Running will affect the mugger's self-esteem, which is already low because he mugs people for a living," said my friend. "You'll give him little recourse but to shoot you or club you with a blunt object."

"So what do you suggest a mugging victim should do?"

"We found it best to make an offering of some kind," said his wife.

"Give up your watch?" I said.

My friends laughed.

"You don't wear a watch in this city!" said his wife. "You give up your wallet."

"But my wallet contains my license, credit cards and other vital information."

"You don't hand over your real wallet," said my friend, looking at his wife like I was an idiot. "You give up a dummy wallet. You carry your real wallet in your sock or your underwear."

"I keep my credit cards in my bra," said his wife.

"Look, I understand the desire to protect yourselves against muggers, but carrying a concealed weapon is a big step," I said. "Why don't you get yourself a dog?"

"We tried a big German shepherd," said my friend, "but a mugger took his collar."

"Can't you call the police?"

"Ha!" said his wife. "Maybe to file a theft report."

"How about Mace?" I said.

"If a mugger catches you reaching for Mace," said my friend, "that gives him license to ..."

"Shoot me or strike me with a blunt object?"

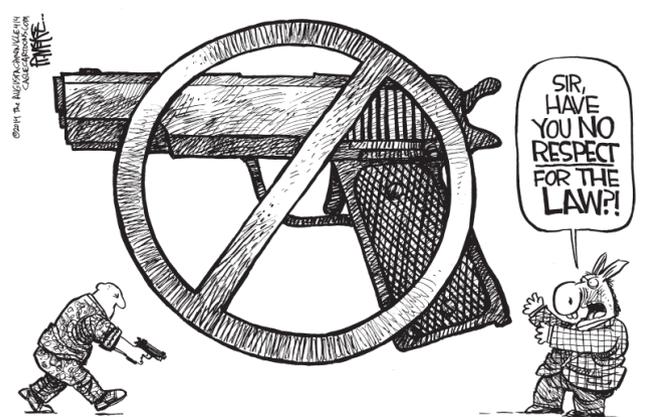

"Now you're getting it," said his wife.

"We've been trying get a permit to carry a concealed firearm since 2008, when the Supreme Court held that D.C.'s handgun ban violated individuals' Second Amendment right. The court affirmed that 'the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed' in federal enclaves."

"So the ruling allowed you to purchase handguns?"

"That's right," said his wife, "but we weren't allowed to carry and conceal them as we walk to and from our condo. To be granted a conceal permit, we had to prove that we had a 'good reason' to do so."

"Washington has some of the highest crime statistics in the country," said my friend. "Isn't that reason enough?"

"Because of all the muggers?" I said.

"And the Congress," said his wife. "That's why we cheered when U.S. District Judge Richard Leon issued a preliminary injunction banning the 'good reason' clause last month. He argued that it was unconstitutional."

"So we both applied for permits again and are hoping for the best," said my friend, "but the city is fighting to overturn the judge's order. The city says its ability to determine who can and cannot conceal handguns is 'necessary to prevent crime and promote public safety.'"

'Boomer' and the T-Birds pumped for Trump

MYRTLE BEACH, S.C. — Dale "Boomer" Ranney can get in Donald Trump's face like almost no one else.

She has nudged her way to the front of 21 of his rallies, passing up book after book, photo after photo for him to autograph, finding success some 66 times. He smiles at her in recognition now.

When she made a trip to Trump Tower in New York to be near him for his home state primary in April, he spotted her and told his security guards to let her into his victory party there later that day. A photo snapped that morning shows Ranney and her candidate grinning and giving the thumbs up. He's in his suit and red tie. She's in her sequined American flag vest and matching boots.

Ranney is not only a Trump superfan, she's also a forceful advocate and volunteer on behalf of the presumptive Republican presidential nominee. Since February, she has guided an ad hoc team of 50 volunteers who have made some 75,000 telephone calls to voters to preach the gospel of Trump.

The eclectic, unpaid group — she calls them the "Trump T-Birds," after her red Ford convertible — includes a cancer patient making calls from her bed and 13-year-old who spouts Trumpisms.

All candidates count on volunteers to make calls to voters, distribute literature and knock on doors. Few have inspired the kind of passionate dedication that the celebrity billionaire has.

Dale "Boomer" Ranney shows items that Republican presidential candidate Donald Trump has autographed in a photo taken at her home in Myrtle Beach, S.C.

For a candidate just now beginning traditional fundraising and woefully behind in building a staff of paid field organizers, this volunteer network could be especially vital when he faces presumptive Democratic nominee Hillary Clinton this fall.

Ranney, a 62-year-old thrice-married, beach-loving retired industrial engineer, is perhaps Trump's most committed volunteer.

"I feel guilty anytime I'm not on the phone calling for him," Ranney said. "I'm not getting paid, but it's a personal responsibility I feel to get him in the White House."

She approaches her volunteer work much like Trump approaches his bid, speaking off the cuff with prospective voters rather than reading from scripts the campaign has uploaded to its computerized calling program. She uses social media to build a following and makes her own assignments rather than waiting for directions.

"I really think all of us volunteers kind of copy Donald," Ranney said. "It's natural, not rehearsed, kind of ad-libbed."

With the primary nomination locked up, Ranney is starting to organize voter registration drives, acting on her gut that Trump will inspire scores of people who have never voted to come out for him.

DIALING FOR DONALD
She wants to keep dialing up voters, too.

On the eve of the Indiana primary May 3, Ranney settled in at her home for another round of calls.

"Hi, I'm calling from the Trump campaign, and we'd like to know if you have a favorable opinion of Donald Trump," she said cheerily.

"Um, no I do not," the Indiana woman on the receiving end said, curtly but politely.

"Ok, well good luck, ma'am, and thank you very much," Ranney said, ending the call. "That was a no," she said, noting the same in the call system.

One call later, Ranney found a more welcome reception: "Oh, I'm gonna vote for him."

Later in the batch of calls, Ranney got to make her full Trump pitch. She'd reached a voter leaning toward Trump, but concerned about what exactly Trump's stance was on Planned Parenthood, a women's health clinic this particular anti-abortion-rights voter didn't much care for.

"Oh, he's pro-life," Ranney assured the woman. "The only thing about the Planned Parenthood he's for is the fact that it helps women, you know, with their health issues. Other than that he's against it ma'am."

The voter also mentioned the blitz of advertising she'd seen portraying Trump as sexist.

To this, Ranney said, "You know, there's one thing I will say about Mr. Trump, and that is that he is an equal-opportunity criticizer. So if he doesn't like someone, it doesn't matter if you're a man or a woman. He's going to tell you what he thinks." The call ended with Ranney feeling confident she'd found — maybe even helped convert — another Trump voter.

THE T-BIRDS
Ranney's T-Birds are a mix of ladies she knows in Myrtle Beach and Trump fans she's met on social media and in the front of the lines at rallies.

"I figure, if someone is dedicated enough to get in line at 3 a.m., they're dedicated enough to probably want to make some calls for Mr. Trump," she said.

There's Alice Ziriada, a Myrtle Beach friend, who has made more than 12,000 calls for Trump, often from her bed while laid up from chemotherapy to treat her cancer. She said she's loved making the calls, even if they don't always go so well. "No matter how mean they get on the phone with me, cussing, whatever, I just let them finish," she said.

There's Matt Lewandowski (no relation to Trump's campaign manager, Corey Lewandowski) in Virginia Beach, Virginia, a 68-year-old whom Ranney recruited through Facebook. He has made about 9,000 calls, hitting 300 in one day. Now he, in turn, helps find other volunteers. "I'm just one guy, but I hope I am helping with this process," he said.

And dropping the median age of the group, there's Zach Dodson, a 13-year-old seventh-grader in Fort Mill, South Carolina. Ranney met Zach and his mother, Chula, at a Trump rally, and they've become some of Trump's most avid photographers, sharing hundreds of rally shots on social media.

Chula Dodson said, somewhat apologetically, that she and her son had made only a few hundred phone calls apiece because she didn't want him too distracted from school. "I cannot explain how much my son loves Mr. Trump."

Zach, grabbing the phone, chimed in, "I like him because he's a businessman who has made a fortune. He can apply that to America."

He's adept at channeling the candidate himself. "For many decades now," said Zach, "the establishment has failed us miserably and they know it."

Reid strives to win one last campaign before he retires

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAS VEGAS — Democratic leader Harry Reid says he wishes he could stay in the U.S. Senate forever.

So the canny 76-year-old is doing the next best thing as he heads into retirement after more than three decades: working the inside game as only he can, to ensure he leaves Democrats in control of the Senate, the White House and his home state of Nevada next year.

Reid

Donald Trump's unpopularity with Hispanics by playing up the fact

Reid hand-picked the Democratic candidate to replace him, former Nevada Attorney General Catherine Cortez Masto. She is trying to capitalize on presumptive Republican presidential nominee that she would be the first Latina elected to the Senate. If she wins in Nevada, Democrats will be well on their way to taking back Senate control after two years in the minority.

Reid also interceded in Nevada's caucuses in February, helping to get union workers to Democratic presidential caucus sites, which tipped the balance in favor of front-runner Hillary Clinton at a moment when Bernie Sanders' support was surging.

Now Reid is moving all the levers at his disposal to ease the Vermont senator out of the race, subtly and not-so subtly, even as he promotes the idea of liberal Sen. Elizabeth Warren, D-Mass., as Clinton's running mate, something that could be a consolation prize for Sanders' supporters.

Also, Reid is intricately involved with races in Nevada, working to retake control of the Legislature for the Democrats and restore a Democratic majority in the congressional delegation. Whether his vaunted political machine retains its potency may become partially clear on Tuesday, when Nevada holds its congressional primaries and a Reid-backed Democrat faces two strong opponents in the 4th Congressional District race.

The moves are vintage Reid, who has long meddled in politics in his small state, cementing his status as an unparalleled political animal by winning his own re-election race in 2010 against all odds.

BROOKLYN, Mich. — Joey Logano pulled away from the pack to win the FireKeepers Casino 400, becoming the 10th driver to win a NASCAR race this season.

The pole-setter moved past rookie Chase Elliott on lap 153 Sunday and stayed ahead for the 15th Sprint Cup series victory of his career in the 15th race of the year.

Elliott finished a career-best second, followed by Kyle Larson, Brad Keselowski and Kevin Harvick at Michigan International Speedway.

Dale Earnhardt Jr., who finished 39th out of 40, is the only winner from 2015 that is winless this year.

NASCAR's latest aerodynamic package made its debut, hoping to create more competitive racing. The setup included, for the first time in more than a decade, reducing the downforce to 1,500 pounds and shortening the spoiler to 2.5 inches.

"It's not a whole lot different than the other package," Earnhardt bristled from the garage after a crash knocked him out of the race. "I think we talk about packages too much."

Drivers weren't sure how their cars would handle due to the changes, which will also be implemented next month at Kentucky. That might have led to an uncharacteristically accident-free start on the 2-mile oval about 70 miles west of Detroit.

The first caution didn't slow down the race until lap 47, the cleanest start at MIS since 2009.

Free-flowing racing didn't last long. Yellow flags

Cubs crush Braves again

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — Jon Lester stopped himself as he started to say he hoped the Cubs could keep winning at their current pace.

That would be asking for too much.

Lester earned his fourth straight victory after allowing no earned runs in seven innings as Chicago beat the Atlanta Braves 13-2 on Sunday to win their final series at Turner Field.

The Cubs (43-18) have won 14 of 18 and improved to 39-2 when scoring at least four runs. They moved 25 games over .500 with their best record through 61 games since 1907, when they won the World Series.

"It's been fun to be a part of and hopefully we can just keep ... obviously the pace we're on is pretty crazy," Lester said. "Not a lot of us have answers for what's going on. Enjoy it while we can."

Lester (8-3) also is on an impressive personal run. He has allowed only one earned run with no walks in three wins this month, lowering his ERA to 1.89. He gave up five hits to the Braves, his high mark of the month, with seven strikeouts.

"That's three in a row he's been outstanding," said Cubs manager Joe Maddon. "Never tired. His stuff was still good at the end. He's pitching with a lot of confidence right now."

Maddon also had difficulty finding perspective for the Cubs' strong record.

"Listen, I have nothing to complain about," Maddon said. "I have been on a team with this kind of record in the minor leagues. Never in the majors."

Chicago outscored Atlanta 21-4 in winning the final two games of the three-game series.

Pitchers swinging for fences?

The Associated Press

Jake Arrieta and other pitchers have expressed interest in the All-Star Home Run Derby.

Maddon OK with hurlers' HR Derby

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — Cubs manager Joe Maddon is intrigued about having pitchers, including Chicago ace Jake Arrieta, compete in the All-Star Home Run Derby.

Giants ace Madison Bumgarner has said he would like to participate in the July 11 event at San Diego. Following his 8-2 win over the Atlanta Braves on Saturday night, Arrieta said he would want to match home-run power with Bumgarner.

"If he's in it, I want to be in it," Arrieta said after having two hits in the win. Arrieta said swinging for the fences in the All-Star spotlight "would probably be the most adrenalin I would ever have."

Maddon said Sunday he would not be worried about Arrieta getting hurt but stopped short of endorsing the idea on behalf of the team. "That's above my pay grade, right there," he said.

Still, Maddon became more enthused about the idea as he mentioned Zack Greinke, Clayton Kershaw, Jacob deGrom and Bartolo Colon as other possible NL pitchers who could compete.

"I think it would be interesting," Maddon said. "It might even be more interesting than the regulars."

Maddon said a home-run competition for pitchers would have to be "a toned-down version" with fewer swings.

"Well, he's strong, man," said Maddon of Arrieta. "Real strong. Bumgarner has got a great swing, though. I watched. Jake is good but Bumgarner is really loose and free and easy with his approach."

St. Louis pitcher Adam Wainwright used his Twitter account on Sunday to state his interest in joining the fun — if there is an opportunity.

"Well, if Madbum and @JARrieta34 want in on this #homerunderby...I might as well throw my name in the hat!" Wainwright tweeted. Maddon said pitchers would have no problem hitting homers off batting-practice pitches.

"I happened to see some video of Bumgarner. It was pretty impressive," he said. "He could be like an absolute regular pinch hitter and he could be actually be a DH in the American League, I think. He's good. He really is. He's that good."

Bumgarner has hit two homers this season. He hit five last season and has 13 in his big league career.

Arrieta has one homer this year after hitting two in 2015.

"I said I was going to hit five this year, so I've got a ways to go," Arrieta said.

Fulmer dealing for Tigers

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — On an Old-Timers' Day at Yankee Stadium filled with Hall of Famers and World Series MVPs, the youngest player on the field by far was the biggest star.

Detroit rookie Michael Fulmer dominated Sunday, winning his fifth straight start while extending his scoreless streak to 28 1/3 innings to lead the Tigers over New York 4-1.

"Just looking to give my team a chance to win and put up zeros while I'm at it," Fulmer said.

With Whitey Ford, Rickey Henderson and Bernie Williams on hand for the pre-game festivities, the 23-year-old Fulmer excelled.

Fulmer (7-1) blanked the Yankees on two hits for six innings and left with a 2.52 ERA. He's won six consecutive decisions overall — in a tremendous string of five starts, he's yielded just one run and 13 hits in 34 1/3 innings.

According to the Elias Sports Bureau, Fulmer became the first pitcher since 1893, when the mound was moved to its current distance, to throw at least six shutout innings and permit no more than three hits in four straight starts in the same season.

"Baseball's a game over the long haul," Tigers manager Brad Ausmus said. "He's been very good over this one-month span. I want him to be this good the rest of his life."

"Ride the wave," he added. Fulmer has, without getting a big ego or, as of yet, a really big profile.

As Fulmer walked from the shower to his locker, Tigers pitcher Shane Greene was doing a TV interview in an adjacent stall. Mindful of Draymond Green was suspended by the NBA.

Warriors lose Green for Game 5

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

OAKLAND, Calif. — Golden State star Draymond Green was suspended for Monday's Game 5 of the NBA Finals after the league assessed a Flagrant 1 foul from his scuffle with Cleveland's LeBron James.

The NBA announced the retroactive decision Sunday, issuing James a technical on the play late in Golden State's 108-97 victory Friday. A statement announcing the discipline said that Green "made unnecessary contact with a retaliatory swipe of his hand to the groin" of James.

"There's no way you can say this is an acceptable act," Kiki VanDeWeghe, the NBA's executive vice president of basketball operations, told The Associated Press in a phone interview.

Green has been on the cusp of trouble for much of the postseason. This is his fourth flagrant foul point, which resulted in the automatic suspension. He also has five technical fouls and was fined $25,000 for kicking Oklahoma City's Steven Adams in the groin during the Western Conference finals.

The Warriors lead the series 3-1 with a chance to clinch their second straight championship at home in Oracle Arena, but now they'll have to do it without one of their most important players.

"You have to do what you think is right for the play," VanDeWeghe said, "and unfortunately Draymond put himself in this position."

Warriors coach Steve Kerr spoke to Green earlier in the postseason about keeping his emotions in check. Kerr declined to respond in specifics to the decision Sunday, saying

Fab Five? Titans could have new-look starters

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Titans' front office and coaching staff keep stressing the importance of competition.

The goal is to find the best 90-man roster for training camp and whittle it down to the best 53-man roster for the regular season.

But while the depth chart remains fluid, most starting jobs have already been claimed.

Marcus Mariota will take the snap from Ben Jones and hand off to DeMarco Murray, perhaps on the very first play of the season.

But several players behind the established starters will receive playing time, as well, and could challenge for more depending on

Derrick Henry

Kevin Byard, safety

The Titans have been enamored by Byard's abilities in the classroom. MTSU's career record holder for interceptions will almost certainly start at free safety entering the 2017 season, and could replace Rashad Johnson at some point this year. Johnson, 30, signed a one-year deal with the Titans in March after his former team, the Cardinals, didn't make him an offer.

Here are five players who could force their way into starting roles this season:

Derrick Henry, running back
Murray is billed as the team's bell-cow running back entering the season, but if he's unable to revert to his 2014 form, when he won the NFL rushing title with the Cowboys, the Titans will end up going with the hot hand. Henry, the bruising Heisman Trophy winner, has already begun to show he's no one-trick pony, having received praise from coach Mike Mularkey for his route-running and pass-catching abilities.

Austin Johnson, nose tackle

Al Woods tested free agency before signing a three-year, $10.5 million deal to return to the Titans. He's a solid player, but only the 29-year-old's signing bonus and 2016 salary are guaranteed. Johnson, a second-round pick out of Penn State, will rotate into games and is the team's starting nose tackle of the future.

Tajae Sharpe, wide receiver

Ineffectiveness by Dorial Green-Beckham or Rishard Matthews could force the Titans to find a way to get the reliable rookie on the field. Kendall Wright is expected to contribute largely from the slot, but could be moved to the outside, allowing Sharpe to emerge as the team's top slot receiver, often a starting job in today's pass-happy NFL. The fifth-round pick led the nation with 111 catches at UMass last season.

Sebastian Tretola, guard

Don't count out the rookie sixth-round pick if either Jeremiah Poutasi or Quinton Spain, both second-year pros, open the season as the team's starting left guard. Tretola is a mauler in the run game and has a nasty on-field demeanor the Titans love. He started at left guard at Arkansas for the final 24 games of his college career.

Berger wins St. Jude

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MEMPHIS — Daniel Berger won the FedEx St. Jude Classic on Sunday for his first PGA Tour title, shooting a 3-under 67 to hold off Phil Mickelson, Steve Stricker and Brooks Koepka by three strokes.

The 23-year-old Floridian had had never been in a final pairing until Sunday. When Mickelson, with his 42 career PGA Tour titles, closed within a stroke, Berger birdied three of his next four holes, highlighted by a 32-foot putt on the par-3 14th that pushed his lead to 13 under.

Berger finished at 13-under 267. He became the 13th first-time winner on tour this season and took home the winner's check of $1.1 million in the 50th start of his career.

"It's the greatest feeling," Berger said. "You work so hard to get here and to finally be able to put the trophy up, there's no way I can describe it."

Mickelson and Stricker shot 67, and Koepka had a 66 in the round that was delayed three hours because of storms. Dustin Johnson had a 63, setting the back-nine record with a 29, to finish fifth at 9 under.

Berger also became the fourth first-time winner at this event in the past six years and 10th overall in Memphis.

Now he will head to Oakmont trying to do something no one has ever done before by following up a tour title by winning the U.S. Open. Only 11 have ever won a major after winning on tour, and Rory McIlroy was the last when he won the PGA Championship the week after taking the WGC-Bridgestone Invitational in 2014.

CONSTELLATION SENIORS

FLOURTOWN, Pa. — Bernhard Langer won the Constellation Senior Players Championship for the third straight year, holing a 12-foot birdie putt on the final hole for a one-stroke victory Sunday at windy Philadelphia Cricket Club.

The 58-year-old German star won his seventh senior major title — his fifth in the last 11 majors — to tie Hale Irwin for second place on the career list, a victory behind Jack Nicklaus.

CURTIS CUP

DUBLIN — Bronte Law became the second player in Curtis Cup history to go 5-0, beating Mika Liu 2 up in Britain and Ireland's 11 1/2-8 1/2 victory over the United States.

Four points ahead after taking five of six matches Saturday at Dun Laoghaire, Britain and Ireland added 3 1/2 points in the eight singles matches to win the biennial event for the third time in 20 years.

LYONESS OPEN

ATZENBRUGG, Austria — China's Wu Ashun rallied to win the Lyonesse Open for his second European Tour victory, improving his chances of playing in the Rio Olympics.

The 30-year-old Wu closed with a 3-under 69 for a one-stroke victory over Spain's Adrian Otaegui. The China Open winner last year, Wu finished at 13-under 275 at Diamond Country Club.

RUST-OLEUM CHAMPIONSHIP

IVANHOE, Ill. — Max Homa won the Rust-Oleum Championship for his second Web.com Tour victory, closing with a 5-under 67 for a one-stroke victory over Josh Teater and John Mallinger.

Kepler rocks Sox

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MINNEAPOLIS — Max Kepler's first major league homer was a three-run shot in the bottom of the 10th inning Sunday that gave the Minnesota Twins a 7-4 victory over the Boston Red Sox.

Joe Mauer drew a leadoff walk in the 10th from Matt Barnes (2-3) and was sacrificed to second by Trevor Plouffe. Brian Dozier singled off the glove of shortstop Xander Bogaerts, sending Mauer to third.

Boston brought in outfielder Mookie Betts and played in with a five-man infield, but Kepler made that all moot when the rookie from Germany sent a long drive to center field to give Minnesota its fifth walk-off win of the season.

Boston had scored 23 runs on 31 hits in the series and entered play with an AL-high 5.98 runs per game.

Indians 8
Angels 3
ANAHEIM, Calif. — Francisco Lindor homered and drove in three runs. Carlos Santana hit two homers.

Rangers 6
Mariners 4

SEATTLE — Cole Hamels became the seventh active pitcher to reach 2,000 strikeouts and Mitch Moreland homered to lead Texas.

Athletics 6
Reds 1

CINCINNATI — Marcus Semien and Jake Smolinski each hit a two-run homer in Oakland's four-run second inning, and Oakland snapped its seven-game losing streak.

Rays 5
Astros 0

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — Reigning AL Cy Young Award winner Dallas Keuchel became the first major league pitcher to lose nine games this season when Matt Moore pitched two-hit ball over seven innings.

Royals 3
White Sox 1

CHICAGO — Yordano Ventura pitched seven sharp innings in his first start since he brawled with Manny Machado in Baltimore.

Brewers 5
Mets 3

MILWAUKEE — Zach Davies tossed six-plus strong innings of three-hit ball for Milwaukee.

The mistake-prone New York Mets played without ill manager Terry Collins.

Diamondbacks 6
Marlins 0

PHOENIX — Robbie Ray threw seven-plus scoreless innings and Peter O'Brien homered to help Arizona.

Nationals 5
Phillies 4

WASHINGTON — Jayson Werth hit a two-out, two-run single in the ninth inning, helping Washington rally for a three-game sweep.

bottom of the ninth inning for a 4-3 victory stands as the biggest hit in the history of a program that had made nine previous NCAA Tournament appearances but never got out of regionals.

No. 3 Miami advanced to a second straight CWS and 25th overall with a 9-4 win over Boston College in Game 3 in Coral Gables, Florida. Edgar Michelangeli hit a three-run homer and grand slam, with the second blast leading to a confrontation between the teams after Michelangeli flipped his bat at the start of his trot and an exchange of words between him and BC catcher Nick Sciortino.

Oklahoma State defeated South Carolina 3-1 to post a sweep in Columbia, where the Gamecocks were 30-3 in the regular season but 4-3 in the national tournament. The Cowboys, who are in the CWS for the first time since 1999, scored all three of their runs in the fifth inning on two hits and two errors.

No. 5 Texas Tech bounced back in from a Game 1 loss in Lubbock to win two straight over East Carolina, with Erikson Lanning and Hayden Howard combining on a two-hit shutout in an 11-0 victory Sunday. The Red Raiders are in their second CWS, all in the last three years.

In Sunday night games, it was Florida State at No. 1 Florida, TCU at No. 4 Texas A&M, and Coastal Carolina at No. 8 LSU. Florida State and Coastal Carolina played 1-0, and TCU and A&M played a Game 3.

Arizona was the first team to make the CWS after sweeping No. 6 Mississippi State on Saturday.

FULMER

his place as a rookie, Fulmer waited out of the way for Greene to finish.

A moment later, Yankees great Reggie Jackson strolled right past Fulmer in the clubhouse — "Mr. October" never even noticed the bearded newcomer.

Fulmer struck out three and walked three, mixing a fastball in the mid-90s (mph) with an effective changeup. He escaped his only serious jam by retiring Carlos Beltran on a flyball with the bases loaded to end the fifth.

"The slider was good. For me, especially, I was having trouble picking the spin on the slider. He got me chasing a couple of times," Beltran said.

Before this season, Fulmer had never pitched above Double-A. The Tigers got him last July in a trade that it's "irrelevant what any of us think — we have to accept the decision and move on."

His players were upset.

"There's no rhyme or reason to it," center Andrew Bogut said. "I've been in the same situation. I've been suspended before. I think it's like a lottery decision, like the draft. They just pull out a ping-pong ball and make a decision."

Green is averaging 15.3 points this postseason — third-most on the team behind Stephen Curry and Klay Thompson — and a team-leading 9.6 rebounds along with nearly six assists.

While the NBA said the suspension was the result of the contact, there were also hard feelings among the players that lingered Sunday about what Green said to that sent slugger Yoenis Cespedes to the New York Mets.

"Just trying to convince the Tigers they didn't make a mistake," Fulmer said.

Fulmer's scoreless string is longest by a Tigers rookie since John Hiller had a 28 2/3-inning streak in 1967.

Ian Kinsler homered, drove in two runs and scored twice as the Tigers won a series in the Bronx for the first time since 2008 at the old Yankee Stadium. Detroit has won seven of its last nine, with Kinsler homering and driving in five runs during Saturday night's victory.

The Yankees lost their second in a row following a five-game winning streak. This loss ended a stretch in which New York played 40 games in 41 days, going 23-17 in that span.

Chase Headley hit an RBI single in the eighth off Justin Wilson.

James during the scuffle. Thompson mentioned James' feelings might have been hurt by trash talk from Green, to which the four-time MVP James later laughed and said, "Ahh, my goodness," noting, "It's so hard to take the high road," and he wouldn't address those remarks further.

"I felt at that point in time it was a little outside of basketball," James said.

Green called Friday's incident "stuff that's said on the court." Yet James considered it all inappropriate and said he and his teammates reviewed the sequence on video.

"Draymond just said something that I don't agree with," James said. "I'm all cool with the competition. I'm all fine with that, but some of the words that came out of his mouth were a little bit overboard, and being a guy with pride, a guy with three kids and a family, things of that nature, some things just go overboard."

As his teammates went through shooting drills near the end of Sunday's workout, Green could be seen off to the side speaking to Warriors general manager Bob Myers.

The Warriors learned of the suspension late in the session, and Green wasn't made available to the media.

"He's not happy, no," Curry said. "But anybody in that situation, you can't expect them to be OK with the decision. I know he's going to give us positive energy. He's going to support us as a team the best way he can, even though he's not going to be on the floor, and we have to go out and get a win for him."

CUBS

Javier Baez hit a three-run homer off Chris Withrow to cap the Cubs' six-run eighth inning.

Anthony Rizzo drove in three runs with three hits. David Ross had two hits and also drove in two runs, one on a base-loaded walk from Alexi Ogando in Chicago's three-run seventh.

Jason Heyward, who began his career with the Braves, had three hits, two walks and scored three runs.

The Cubs matched their season high with four errors. The first of two throwing errors by Ross, on a double-steal by Freddie Freeman and Chase d'Arnaud, allowed d'Arnaud to score Atlanta's only run in the first inning.

The Braves (18-44) have the majors' worst record. They are 7-25 at home.

became frequent before a restart with 30-plus laps left.

Logano had a huge lead with 12 laps to go when Denny Hamlin, the Daytona 500 winner, blew out his front right tire to force another restart. Logano pulled away when the racing went green again and coasted to the win.

BUSCH BUMMED: Kyle Busch had finished 30th or worse in four straight races since winning his third race of the year last month at Kansas. Busch completed just 52 laps before blowing his engine, causing him to finish 40th and last.

"The last four races have been really, really bad," he acknowledged.

Braves rookie right-hander John Gant (0-1), making his first start after seven relief appearances, allowed three runs, two earned, in 4 1/3 innings. Gant gave up four hits with four walks and left the game trailing 3-1.

"He battled through a lot and did a good job of keeping the game there against, obviously, one of the best teams in baseball," said Braves interim manager Brian Snitker.

UNUSUAL SLIDE RULE CALL

A review determined Ross violated the slide rule — even when he didn't slide into second base. Ross hit a grounder to first baseman Freddie Freeman, who threw to shortstop Erick Aybar in the sixth inning. Ross ran past the bag as Aybar was forced to alter his throw back to first. The throw was late and Lester initially was safe at first until the review resulted in a double play.

FAMILY TIES: The Earnhardt family — Dale Jr. and his nephew, Jeffrey — had a rough day, finishing toward the back of the 40-car race. The right side of Earnhardt Jr.'s car crashed into the wall, ending his race after 61 laps. He bumped against Chris Buescher soon after a restart.

"He must have just lost the nose of his car," Earnhardt said. "I hate it, but you try to take care of each other out there."

Jeffrey Earnhardt was forced out on lap 107 when a fire started in the front of his car, which became fully engulfed in flames as he steered it on to pit row. Jeffrey Earnhardt, who had to jump from the car, was evaluated at the infield medical center was released.

Circulation Customer Service Rep

Our readers have come to expect perfection in terms of newspaper delivery, because we deliver the Johnson City Press to a better than 99.7% accuracy. Still, every day, we miss a few, and you can bet those few call us to let us know when it happens.

Without our subscribers, we wouldn't have much of a business, so we do everything we can to solve all delivery and billing issues the first time a customer calls. We have an opening in our customer service department for someone that can be trained to do just that.

We offer a salary of $10.00 per hour, a great benefits package, bonus opportunity, paid time off, and room for advancement. The right candidate for this job will have business office experience, working with the public, as well as a knack for ensuring that the customer knows they are important to us and that we will resolve the problem. Basic Windows computer skills are required, along with accurate typing ability, 10-key proficiency, and high attention to detail.

In addition to Circulation Customer Service duties, we will cross-train you to handle ads in our Classified Advertising Department. Success in this area pays additional commissions. While the vast majority of the classified calls are inbound, there are also special monthly projects that involve outbound calling to business customers.

We are a part of Tennessee's Drug Free Workplace program. The Johnson City Press is also an Equal Opportunity Employer. We work hard, but also have a bit of fun when things are not hectic. If this sounds like the job you have been looking for, send your resume and cover letter to cguinn@johnsoncitypress.com.

NEWS OF THE WEIRD

It's a dog's life, or something ...

• Who's a Good Boy?: Life is good now for British men who "identify" as dogs and puppies, as evidenced by a BBC documentary ("Secret Life of the Human Pups") showing men in body outfits (one a Lycra-suited Dalmatian, "Spot"), exhibiting "sexual" expressions (stomach-rubbing, ear-tickling and nuzzling their "handlers"), eating out of bowls, gnawing on chew toys, wearing collars (so as not to be a "stray"), and jumping in the air for "treats." (However, decency demands that a Pup must only feign urinating against a lamppost.) Said Spot (aka Tom), "It's about being given license to

DEAR ABBY

Widow's thoughtful beau is generous to a fault

DEAR ABBY: I'm a widow and have been seeing someone for two years. He often stays at my home. He treats me well, but we have different tastes in furnishings. He brings me trinkets and tacky accessories from his home that I do not display. My spare bedroom closet is filled with these unwanted items. He knows I can afford to buy the things I like. Recently he gave me two gifts — both new — neither of which I feel are appropriate for me. I appreciate the thought, but why would he continue to do this? He can clearly see they are not on display in my home, which would indicate I don't like or want them.

This man is not a cheap-skate. He takes me for nice dinners, movies, brings flowers and chocolates as well. I don't want to hurt his feelings. Should I continue to accept the gifts and pretend I'm thrilled? I don't want to appear to be ungrateful or spoiled, because he is kind and generous. — JANE DOE IN THE SOUTH

DEAR JANE: Before this man spends any more money on gifts you put in a closet, have a talk with him. Explain that while you appreciate the thought behind the trinkets he gives you, you have different tastes, and suggest that the next time he wants to give you something that you pick it out "together." (It doesn't take a crystal ball to see a yard sale in your future.)

DEAR ABBY: My 85-year-old mother is in a dysfunctional relationship with my 50-year-old, alcoholic brother. He lives with her rent-free and abuses her emotionally and verbally. It has gotten physical at times, although she says he has never hit her.

He was recently arrested for domestic violence against his girlfriend, who is a drug addict. Mom has dined 911 more than once, but the last time she told the officers it was a "mistake" because he's on probation, and she didn't want him to go to jail. I'm at a loss about what to do because if I have social services look into it, I risk ruining my relationship with my mom, and she's not in the best of health. Should my siblings and I take a stand, step in and do something about it? — WANTS TO HELP MOM

DEAR WANTS TO HELP: By all means! A report should be made to adult protective services in your state because elder abuse can involve emotional and financial exploitation of a vulnerable adult, as well as physical abuse.

DEAR ABBY: I am a Southern girl born in Virginia, now living in Florida. I have an accent. Why is it that people make fun of your accent when you are from the South, but not from up North? — PONDERING IN FLORIDA

DEAR PONDERING: I'm not sure your assumption is correct. I have heard people imitate Boston and New York accents as well as Southern accents. Years ago, an Australian gentleman used his "American accent" on me, and had me fooled for about 15 minutes. I assume people do this because they think it's funny and not out of a desire to hurt anyone's feelings.

Prime Time Highlights

8 p.m. on WCYB American Ninja Warrior

Some of the obstacle course's latest additions pose fresh hurdles — literally — for the competitors in the new episode "Indianapolis Qualifier." The Floating Steps, the Fly Wheels and the Disk Runner must be conquered by the entrants, notable here for including two individuals famous for being on different tracks: auto racing's Helio Castroneves and Ricky Stenhouse Jr.

8 p.m. on WEMT So You Think You Can Dance

The initial round of this season's competition. showcasing young dancers, concludes with the new episode "Auditions No. 3." As that title indicates, judges Paula Abdul, Jason Derulo and Nigel Lythgoe continue to survey talent — making their last calls on who will progress to the next stage of the contest, and then hope to stay in long enough to be paired with an "All-Star." Cat Deeley is the host.

9 p.m. on WEMT Houdini & Doyle

"Scared to death" is more than a phrase for the victims in the new episode "Bedlam,"

9:59 p.m. on WJHL BrainDead

Marry "The West Wing" and "iZombie," and this is what you get ... sort of. Devised by executive producers Robert and Michelle King, this seriocomic series debuts with "Insanity," introducing Mary Elizabeth Winstead as a newcomer to Capitol Hill. She quickly learns that aliens are steadily overtaking the minds of politicians — and you can insert your own joke here. Danny Pino, Aaron Tveit and Tony Shalhoub also star.

since they appear to have been frightened out of their lives — literally. The case has a profound effect on Doyle (Stephen Mangan), who fears for his own safety after a drug gives him nightmares well beyond the norm. Houdini and Adelaide (Michael Weston, Rebecca Liddiard) do their best to keep him living. Doyle's Sherlock Holmes character is represented by guest star Ewen Bremner.

9 p.m. on FREE Guilt

The less-than-glamorous underbelly of London serves as the gritty backdrop for this new crime drama about a Boston woman, Natalie (Emily Tremaine), who travels to the British capital to defend her sister, Grace (Daisy Head), after she becomes the prime suspect in her roommate's (Rebekah Wainwright) brutal murder. Billy Zane, Cristian Solimeno, Naomi Ryan, Kevin Ryan and newcomer Sam Cassidy also star.

9 p.m. on LIFE Devious Maids

Rosie (Dania Ramirez) gets swept up in the aftermath of the latest Beverly Hills murder, while Marisol (Ana Ortiz) discovers something shocking about Genevieve (Susan Lucci) in the new episode "Another One Wipes the Dust." Zoila (Judy Reyes) grows uneasy about what seems to be an inappropriate closeness between a neighbor and his mother, and Evelyn (Rebecca Wisocky) hits a new low as she tries to move on from Adrian. Elsewhere, Carmen (Roselyn Sanchez) fears Daniela (Sol Rodriguez) may spin out of control.

To cover or not to cover

As you know, there are several aphorisms about bridge. For example, "second hand low" and "third hand high," which are right most of the time. This week, let's look at "cover an honor with an honor."

Today's deal is a textbook example. How does the play go in three no-trump after West leads the heart queen?

South is loath to open one no-trump with a low doubleton, but the bid describes his hand type and strength so accurately.

Declarer starts with seven top tricks: one spade, one heart, two diamonds and three clubs. If the clubs break 3-3, that will provide an eighth winner. Then, if the spade finesse works, the contract will make. With the heart suit wide open, South cannot afford to give up a diamond. So, declarer wins the second heart and cashes his top clubs. Now East must be careful, discarding a diamond. Has East made an error, throwing a diamond from an initial three-card holding (so diamonds are now 2-2)? South takes his diamond king, then plays a diamond to dummy's ace. Again luck is out to lunch — West accurately throws a heart. It is time for spades. Declarer calls for dummy's queen. Note that if East covers with the king, South wins with his ace, then leads a low spade to dummy's nine. That finesse works too, and declarer makes his contract with three spades, one heart, two diamonds and three

ON BRIDGE

HOROSCOPE

JUNE 13, 2016
Get everything in order. Work diligently to take care of unfinished projects. You'll want to be free to take advantage of the opportunities heading your way as the year unfolds. Learning, loving and expressing your thoughts and feelings should be worked into your everyday routine.

GEMINI (May 21—June 20)
Do whatever you can to improve your surroundings. You don't have to spend money to have fun or win approval from others. You have more to offer people than mere cash.

CANCER (June 21—July 22)
Bide your time. Don't get emotional when dealing with partnership matters. Keeping a clear head will be necessary if you want your ideas to be considered. Don't fear being different.

LEO (July 23—Aug. 22)
Talk to people who can help you make your dreams come true. A change in the way you present what you have to offer will pay off. Romance is encouraged.

VIRGO (Aug. 23—Sept. 22)
Proceed with caution. You will face opposition if you are too vocal regarding your intentions. Get everything up and running before you share your plans. Network to gather information, not to give it.

Board of Dwelling Standards
City of Johnson City, Tennessee

TO: Interested parties of 305 West 8th Ave., Johnson City, TN, Washington County Tax Map: 46K D 23.00, Including Cecil Edward Brown

In RE: Property located at: 305 West 8th Ave., Johnson City, TN, Washington County Tax Map: 46K D 23.00.

COMPLAINT AND NOTICE

A petition has been filed with the Board of Dwelling Standards and Review, charging that conditions exist at the above location which render it unfit for human occupation as defined by Ordinance No. 2569 of the City of Johnson City, Tennessee, enacted pursuant to T.C.A. 13-1201 et seq. (now T.C.A. 13-21-101). A copy of the Petition containing specific charges exhibited thereto is attached to this complaint and made a part hereof.

A preliminary investigation by this board has disclosed that there is a basis for these charges. The Code of the City of Johnson City assures your right to a public hearing before this Board to determine whether the structure located at 305 West 8th Ave., Johnson City, TN, Washington County Tax Map: 46K D 23.00, is in fact unfit for human occupation or use as charged.

This public hearing will be held on the 23rd day of June, 2016 at 6:00 pm at the City of Johnson City Commission Chambers located in the Municipal-Safety Building, 601 East Main Street, Johnson City, Tennessee. The right is reserved to adjourn the day or hours of the hearing to another day or hour certain without further notice, upon announcement at the time set forth above.

As a result of this hearing an Order will be issued determining whether said structure is unfit for occupation and, if so, what if any, future action is to be taken relative to the structure and premises described in this Complaint. This Order may require repair, alteration or improvement of the structures, or the Order may require removal of debris or demolition of this structure.

You have the right to file an answer to this Complaint and to appear in person and with your attorney or other representative or otherwise, to present evidence and give testimony at the time and place affixed above.

Should you fail to appear at the time and place affixed above, this Board will enter an Order it deems appropriate under the circumstances.

After the entry of the Order, whether after your appearance or with out your appearance, you have (60) days to appeal to the Chancery court at Johnson City, Tennessee.

In the event no appeal is taken, the Order of this Board shall become final and if you fail to comply with the Order, this board shall cause any work so ordered to be done, with the expense of such work resulting in a lien on the real property upon which the work was done.

By order of the Board:
